One Wonders Who Might Be Able To Use All That Good Georgica Sand

By Dan Rattiner

There are two things I want you to keep in mind as you read this article. One is that you never hear about countries fighting over water rights. And two is that the flow of water along the ocean beach here on Long Island is from east to west.

As far as water rights go, no matter how much two countries might hate each other, they always work things out. Each country knows that not letting the water flow downstream to their neighbor could some day backfire into a situation where the neighbor upstream holds the water from reaching them. You just don't mess with water.

Why the direction of the ocean drift is important is because along with the sea come tons and tons of sand that, in theory, wash along the beaches and, uninterrupted, constantly builds up and washes out as the seasons go by. Currently, as we go into the wintertime, the sand is getting washed out.

Of course, the big thing is the word uninterrupted. And just like a dam might hold up a stream from a downstream neighbor, a stone jetty holds up the sand, catching it in its teeth and piling it up on the eastern side while causing an alarming situation on the western side. Houses on the western side of a jetty can get into a pretty precarious situation, even ultimately getting washed away by the sea if nothing is done.

Interestingly, this past week, two of our local towns, adjacent to one another, tried to deal with two serious problems involving beach

Heaney, has actually declared a state of emergency in Sagaponack, where five oceanfront mansions are on the brink of falling into the sea.

"It is just going to take one good storm," he said. "And these people are going to lose their homes."

By declaring a state of emergency, certain rules are to be suspended and certain other rules are to go into effect. Supervisor Heaney met with the Town Trustees, a separate body that is responsible for the bays and beaches out here. And they agreed. The situation is dire.

Under the old rules, no "hard" structures are allowed to be built between a home and the ocean. If a sand dune crumbles, homeowners are allowed to truck in more sand to shore things up. But nobody wants, on a permanent basis, to see our beautiful beaches armored with steel pilings or steel walls or giant boulders. Now, with the state of emergency, the law says that giant tubes of sand, long sandbags, which are among the hardened structures prohibited, will now be able to be used temporarily. They can be set sand. At the western end of East Hampton, just to the east of a big stone jetty, there is too much sand. And at the eastern end of Southampton, just to the west of a big stone jetty, which is the same stone jetty, an emergency has developed because of a lack of sand.

up while the sand is being washed away in the fall and winter, and they can be removed in the spring when the sea brings the sand back. Indeed, the oceanfront homeowners must post a bond, guaranteeing that funds are available to remove these structures in the spring.

But it has gone way beyond that. Neither the supervisor or the trustees believe that the sand tubes will suffice. And so they are going to allow the temporary placement of stone boulders on the beach to armor the houses that are in the most danger, even though the law as written does not include this in the wording.

"I am not going to allow a few sentences in the town code stand in the way of people saving their homes from destruction," Heaney said.

And the Trustees concurred. Scott Strough of the Trustees said he had been down to Fairfield Lane, where the situation is absolutely dire and those five homes are in danger of imminent collapse.

As this meeting was taking place, at town hall in East Hampton just twelve miles to the east, the town board was grappling with what to do with all this sand that is clogging up the entrance to Georgica Pond just to the east of the stone jetty. There is tons of it. It is so bad that the East Hampton Trustees no longer feel that their equipment is equal to the task of making the semi-annual "cut" between Georgica Pond and the sea to let all the accumulated fresh water out of the pond. The letting of the pond is crucial to the sealife in the pond. The pond water flows out to the sea and, at high tide, the sea partially refills the pond. The pond water is therefore brackish — slightly salty — which is exactly what the crabs and clams in the pond require. Otherwise they will die.

The solution to this problem decided upon in East Hampton was to send out for bids from some construction contractors to come in with what it would cost for bulldozers and cranes to move about twelve thousand cubic yards of sand away from the sandbar that forms the separation between pond and ocean.

Bids to remove the sand are being accepted at Town Hall until 6 p.m., December 14, at which time the bids will be opened and the winner announced. Half the sand must be removed by the end of January, the other half of the sand must be removed by the end of March, and all the bulldozers and cranes must be off the beach as well by the end of March, so several endangered species of birds, the piping plover and the lesser tern, can come and find a deserted beach to nest and lay their eggs on. It's the law.

An interesting part of the bidding process is that bidders must agree to accept payment for their work in removing this sand in, well, sand. There is a big market for the sale of sand. The town has established the value of the sand being removed at $2.50 a cubic yard. The winning bidder could then sell this sand at a markup from that benchmark, thus making a profit on getting rid of the sand.

I wonder who might need this sand?

Of course, it has not escaped the attention of the town fathers in both East and Southampton that the real solution to this problem is not in bulldozers and cranes or boulders and sand tubes, but in removing the jetty.

The jetty was constructed in 1958 by Juan Trippe, the millionaire founder of Pan Am Airways, who built a big oceanfront mansion adjacent to the sandbar that separates Georgica Pond from the sea. Not much was known about the effects of building a jetty at that time. Indeed, when he built it, the town did not even have zoning. And Juan Trippe, a powerful man, wanted to shore up his house. And he did.

To remove the jetty will require the approval of State Department of Environmental Conservation, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Marine

Sponsorships, Logos, Labels, Etc. May Trickle Down To The Hamptons

By Dan Rattiner

Well, it's Saturday and the Southampton High School football team will be playing this week against Westhampton Beach at Hildreth Department Store Stadium.

Could it happen? The phenomenon of company branding is now a flood throughout the land. And it is now reaching down to the high school level. But not here. Yet.

"My understanding is that with public schools you're not allowed to advertise, per se, on school buses or stadiums," said Randall Dobler, who is director of Facilities at Southampton Town.

How about a P. C. Richards Athletic Field in Amagansett? How about the Mickey's Carting Auditorium in Montauk?

"We don't trade on our students," said East Hampton School Superintendent Dr. Raymond Gualtieri.

But we do. In Little League and the various other summer leagues, the teams have been named after local businesses in the area for quite some time. The White's Drug Store Wildcats meet the Herrick's Hardware Cougars. In exchange for the advertisements, the businesses pay for the uniforms.

And now big time events are getting branded. In football, we have the Chik-fil-A Bowl, formerly the Peach Bowl.

---

In a sense, there is a certain ridiculousness to this. Watching a six-year-old boy circling under a foul ball with NORTH MAIN STREET CLEANERS on his back is surely amusing. But then, anything done by a six-year-old is sort of amusing.

Further up the chain, the kids on the high school tennis teams, emulating the pros, trot out onto the court with a white shirt with the Nike swoosh on the breast pocket. They do it for nothing. If the Andrew Agassis and Lindsay Davenport of the world can get paid millions of dollars to wear that Nike swoosh, who is to say we can't get paid too?

"Oh, she was tough," a sweating Caryatid says to CBS after the match, wiping her brow with a Wilson towel. "I never thought I had her until that final point."

Events are being branded. They have been for a long time. Sometimes, after the company that creates them. So we have the Dan's Papers Kite Fly, and the Dan's Papers Potato Hampton Minithon. And now big time events are getting branded. In football, we have the Chik-fil-A Bowl, formerly the Peach Bowl.

Everybody knows what's happened to stadiums. The San Francisco Giants play in Pac Bell Stadium. The New Jersey Nets play in the Continental (Airlines) Arena.

It won't be long before the John Drew Theatre in East Hampton becomes the Coca Cola Theatre. John Drew may have been a prominent Broadway actor who lived in East Hampton around 1910, but he and his heirs are not putting up $50,000. Could there be a Tate's Chocolate Chip Cookie Museum where the (Samuel) Parrish Art Museum stands now?

In New York City, you may recall that Mayor Bloomberg last fall put forward the idea of selling the names of various buildings in the City to help balance the budget. It could put an end to the Jacob Javits Convention Center or the (Andrew) Carnegie Hall. Maybe even Rockefeller Center. People made fun of it, and the idea sort of died.

But this was just a glitch in the incoming tide. The phenomenon may not have come to the East End high schools just yet because as an affluent community we can afford our school taxes. But there are other communities, poorer communities, where the school budgets only get passed after funding for sports activities are eliminated. The parents have to pay extra if they want their kids to play football, basketball or baseball.

For example, in Brooklawn, New Jersey, south of Camden, the Alice Costello Elementary School held an auction where businesses could bid to have the school gymnasium named for them. The kids now go to the ShopRite of Brookhaven Center for the gym period, thanks to a deal that will involve ShopRite paying $100,000 spread out over the next ten years.

"Twenty-five years from now, when this is widespread and accepted, people will say this all started here," said School District Superintendent Dr. John Kellmayer. He was referring to the auction.

Brooklawn also wants to sell the jump circle at the center of the school basketball court for $2,500, and for $500 for a banner on the wall. $2,500 for an ad near the baseline. They hope to raise a quarter of a million dollars.

Maybe in the next year or two, the whole school name will change. Alice Costello might have been an important official in State government, but that was a long time ago. But Taco Bell Elementary might be good for big bucks.

(Opponents to all this say the children are not going to school to learn about Taco Bell and they have a point. Though they say Albert Einstein Elementary might be okay.)

Then there are parts of the country where branding a high school football stadium seems legitimate. In the Midwest particularly, where high school football is a very big deal and crowds of 15,000 people come to the stadium on a Friday night to watch the Bulldogs play against the Green Eagles under the lights, it makes perfect sense.

The Midland Badgers in Midland, Texas for example, play in the Southwest Bell Stadium. The Vernon Hills (Illinois) football team plays on Rust-o-leum Field. The kids are proud of the sponsorship. Teams with stadiums that don't have them are envious. The pros get these names. And now we do too.

All of this is either because of, or causing, a big trend on Madison Avenue away from buying straight TV commercials and toward branding products on the programs. Advertisers want to hook into the trend. Did you know that at major league baseball games broadcast on TV, the advertisements on the walls of the outfield and infield are sometimes just digital? Networks are loathe to just give away what is there, so they put their own "advertisement" on a wall, using the same digital techniques that gets the yellow ten yard cyber first down marker you see in pro football on the field on the screen. Nobody sees that from the stands.

Product placement was, for a long time, just a small thing and nobody thought very much of it. It started in the movie business. Gangster drives into a gas station. It says Mobil Oil on the gas pump. Mobil Oil got in the movie in exchange for providing the gas pump. But then in

The Only Murders In East Hampton In 15 Years Are Both Very Odd

By Dan Rattiner

Very few people get murdered in East Hampton. In the last fifteen years there have been only two that I know of. One was in Amagansett in 1987. And one was in East Hampton in 2002. There are differences between them. But one thing they both have in common is that they were each exceedingly strange.

On the night of October 23, 1987, Joe and Diane Pikul came home from a party they had been attending at a place called Martell's in Amagansett. Joe was a successful New York stock analyst. His wife was the assistant publisher of Harper's magazine. People had seen them arguing. Early the next morning, Joe Pikul reported that his wife was missing from their vacation home on Windmill Lane about three blocks north of the center of town. He said she had gone out. He reported her as a missing person. But she never came back.

Six days later, the body of Diane Pikul was found inside a black garbage bag in a gully on the side of the New York Thruway near Goshen. She had been strangled. Police arrested Joe Pikul at work later that day. And when they took him in and they searched him, they found that under his suit he was wearing a bra and panties.

"Sometimes I wear women's underwear," he said.

The garbage bag and the rope that it was tied up with were traced back to the Amagansett Hardware Store, where a clerk remembered Joe Pikul coming in on the morning

UNDERSTANDING OHIO AND OTHER PLACES

By Dan Rattiner

What is wrong with the people on the east and west coasts? Why don't they get with the program, as understood by those who live in the middle? George Bush won the presidency largely because of the votes of all the people in the middle. We run around, many of us who voted for Kerry on the east and west coasts, and we say we don't understand it. They must be from a different world.

Well, they are and they aren't. The values of those in the middle are the simple, conservative values upon which this country was founded. Family, church, friends, home cooking, hard work and Wal-Mart. They freely tell those of us on the coasts that they don't spend much time looking at the big picture. They leave that to the people in Washington, or to the folks in New York or out in Hollywood.

And so, from all accounts, they elected a man who has his heart in the right place, who is sure of what he believes in and who has been known to make awful decisions, largely because he isn't afraid to make them. Sounds like

Uncle Fred over there who comes every Thanksgiving.

Those in the middle had a low regard for Mr. Kerry, who said he would make the right decisions instead of the wrong decisions, because, frankly, he seemed to be someone who would tell you what you wanted to hear. Like Uncle Charlie over there, that snake.

(A parody among the Democrats who nominated Kerry — oh, how we smart folks on the coasts are so full of parody and nuance and compassion and sophistication — was VOTE FOR KERRY BEFORE YOU DECIDE TO VOTE AGAINST KERRY).

Just before the election, I went to see a movie in East Hampton called The Motorcycle Diaries, which was essentially a loving biography of the early years of Che Guevara. He is born and raised, not in Cuba, but in Buenos Aires, in a family from the wealthy elite. He goes to medical school, but takes a year off after his third year, to go with his best friend on a motorcycle to see all of South America. They travel more than 8,000 miles, first south through Patagonia and across the Andes to Peru, then back up the west coast through the jungles to Venezuela. He is handsome, fun and eager to have his adventure. And he knows nothing about Communism or politics.

In the course of his travels, he briefly comes across a couple from a tribe in Peru. They wear their native garb and they are on the road, begging, because American businessmen have bought the land — turns out it was owned by a wealthy local landowner — and driven them off so they can mine bauxite. The natives, thousands of them, now have nothing, except they could get jobs at the mine so they could make enough money to buy things. Trouble is, there is a muster every morning of everyone who wants to work, and the boss only chooses a few of them, loads them on the back of a truck and goes off. The rest are told to "come back tomorrow."

that Diane disappeared to buy various supplies. According to a receipt that the owner of the store was able to find, Pikul bought a flashlight, a rope, a wheelbarrow, a bag of rags, a pack of sponges, a roll of paper towels, two plastic black tubs, a Styrofoam ice chest, a box of Tide, a box of garbage bags and three 100-foot-long coils of sash cord. The bill was $377.54. The clerk remembered he helped Pikul carry all this out to his car, but that Pikul was very adamant that the hardware store people not open the trunk.

"When we got to the car, which was parked out front," the clerk testified, "I asked him to open the trunk so I could throw all the stuff in, but he said no, no, just put it in the back seat."

At the trial where Pikul stood accused of murder, a friend of Pikul's who lives in upstate New York with his wife and kids said that Pikul had called him and asked if his two children could stay with the friend upstate for awhile. Pikul said his wife had gone off. She had done it before. But this time, she had not called him to let him know where she had gone. They told him to bring the kids up. Pikul said he thought he and Diane might be getting a divorce.

Another man, also a friend of Pikul's with a house in Amagansett, said that Pikul had called him that morning to say he had a big argument with his wife the night before and she had run off. He asked what they had fought about. Pikul said he had found an empty condom package by the sofa in his living room that was not his brand. His wife said she did not know how it got there.

"Maybe it was one of the babysitters," the neighbor said.

"Maybe it was," Pikul replied.

As Pikul, out on bail, awaited the trial, he lived in his Manhattan apartment on Tenth Street and Sixth Avenue with his children and registered them at the Grace Church School in Greenwich Village. At a parents meeting at the school, Joe Pikul, who was 51, met and fell in love with a woman almost 20 years his junior. Her name was Mary Bain. She was married with two children about the same age as Pikul's children, but now, having fallen in love with Pikul, she turned all her worldly possessions over to her husband, gave him custody of their children, married Pikul and moved with him and his two children to Lanesville, New York which is at the foot of Hunter Mountain. Pikul spent his time preparing for his trial. Mary, who was a fashion designer, was able to set up a studio in the house and work by phone.

On Thursday, March 16, 1989, Pikul was found guilty of murder in the second degree and sentenced to a lengthy prison term. Three months later, Pikul took sick in prison and died. The diagnosis was AIDS.

Pikul left a considerable estate, which went directly to his new wife. She has raised his two children upstate.

At this writing, Daniel Pelosi is on trial in Riverhead for the murder of Ted Ammon, the wealthy New York financier who was killed in his bed at his summer home on Middle Lane, East Hampton.

Whoever did this had disabled the alarm, snuck upstairs at one in the morning, fired a shot with a stun gun to disable Ammon and then bludgeoned him to death in his bed. The killer left no fingerprints, but made off with the sheets. Also missing was the hard drive from a video surveillance system that had been secretly installed at the house without, as it has turned out, Ted Ammon's knowledge.

Daniel Pelosi is an electrician from Manorsville, New York, who, at the time of the crime, was married and supporting eight children.

It wasn't until two years after the crime that Pelosi was indicted. Before the crime, he lived openly with Mrs. Ted Ammon, a Brazilian woman named Generosa who was in the midst of a bitter divorce squabble with her husband. The Ammons also had two children.

Pelosi had met the couple when he was hired by a building contractor to do the electrical work on the New York City duplex apartment of Generosa and her children. Her husband had already moved out and was now living in another part of the city. Pelosi and Generosa hit it off. Pelosi moved in.

Ted Ammon, who was a well-respected Manhattan financier as well as the chairman of the board of the Lincoln Center Jazz Festival, and was seeing numerous women during this time, one of whom was a longtime friend with a summer home in Water Mill.

Among the divorce papers, there is a claim by Mr. Ammon that his wife and Pelosi were telling the Ammon children that the satellite dish on a building across the street from the duplex was allowing Ted Ammon to spy on them. Ammon said he had to take the children to that apartment and introduce them to the owner of the satellite dish so they could see that this was not true.

In fact, it was the other way around. Generosa and Pelosi were spying on Ted

Swan Family Values

Were They Evicted From Town Pond Or Was It Something Else?

By Emily J Weitz

They seemed so peaceful, a family of three, lazing through the summer in the serene water of Town Pond in East Hampton. When the baby swan was born in late spring, his proud parents held their heads high on their graceful necks. And, like every summer, the townspeople of East Hampton watched the baby grow up. We watched his tiny neck reach up toward the sky, watched him learn to paddle after his parents, watched his grey fur fill in, giving way to his first feathers. We watched the mother sunbathe with the baby at her side as the father spread his wings, protecting his family.

Around the country on November 2, surveys were conducted of voters as they exited polling booths. The two primary reasons that Bush-voters gave for their decision were terrorism and values. A major aspect of the idea of "values" is "family values." The American dream: A mommy caring for her baby, a daddy playing the role of provider and protector, and a baby growing up in the summer sunshine of East Hampton. It seems that what we really aspire to is to be more like swans. They are, after all, beautiful, graceful, and extremely territorial. An attack on their homefront is a call for death by pecking.

The glorious reign of summer only lasts a few months, and the trees let go of their leaves in swirling trails of amber and red. As the territoriality due to necessity, and they engage in a process called "flocking" for self-preservation. They are safer in numbers as the cold months threaten.

But for some reason, this year, the swans have not yet lost their territoriality. They are clinging to their nuclear family values as if the presence of another adult were a threat. Whatever happened to "It takes a village to raise a child"? Oh, right, I am hearkening back to the Clintonian days of yore.

Anyway, it was a crisp blue day in late October when I saw the results of a swan's pride. I was driving home from work, stopped on 27, staring at the Hedges Inn beyond the red light. I glanced to the left and saw an empty, still pond. To the right were two of the swans who belonged in the pond walking away, towards Main Beach. Where were they going? Why were they not in their pond? I had gotten used to risking my life every day, gazing over my right shoulder as I tried to catch a glimpse of the growing baby as weather cools, the swans too have to prepare. They have to sacrifice their nuclear family, and allow other swans to join them. According to Larry Penny, Director of Natural Resources of East Hampton, swans generally go to larger ponds, like Hook Pond, in the winter, where they can all be together. They lose their ardent my car whizzed me past the pond. But there they were, waddling, webbed feet on the pavement, tromping over crisp leaves. I looked in the rearview mirror and turned my car to the right, heading closer to the swans as they continued away. It was the mother and baby, headed for a gravel driveway on Dunemere Lane. And the mother was limping!

Closer to the pond were two other swans, their wings spread like cormorants drying in the sun. Only they weren't drying their feathers; they were flaunting them. They had just evicted a mother and her baby from their home, injuring the mother as she fought for what was hers. The swan that I presume to be the father was standing, emasculated, between his family and the impostors. I pulled over to the side of the road, got out of my car, and watched. At first I thought maybe this was the phase where all the swans become one big happy family. After all, "Four Swans and a Baby" could make for an excellent sitcom. Sadly, though, this was not one big happy family. This was one limping mother, one confused and faithful baby, one father figure standing torn between his obligations and his freedom, and two big bullies who stole the home out from beneath them. Then the thought crossed my mind that the father was one of the bullies, and he was teamed up with his flavor of the month, who left her husband, who was now standing alone in between a dejected mother and child and an arrogant couple flaunting their romance in his face. Then I reminded myself that these are swans, not members of the cast of 90210, and there is no such thing as marriage and there is no such thing as adultery. The only thing that matters is survival.

It's unusual for swans to be so territorial at this time of year, when swans of all races, creeds, and genders should be banding together. No one can brave the cold without unity, so why did those two swans alienate the mother and baby?

I love to drive behind the town of East Hampton at dusk, past the Maidstone Club and down along Egypt Lane. I was taking just this route in the amber light of Sunday afternoon when I glanced towards the little pond that rested opposite the massive Maidstone Club. There they were: just two of the family of three. The unbreakable bond of mother and child prevailed again as the baby stretched his neck back and preened his newly forming white feathers. They may have been down and out, evicted, and beaten up. But they stuck together and made a peaceful home for themselves in the exclusive neighborhood in front of the Maidstone Club, floating through the reeds. Still, the cold winter months are impending, and we need to remember that it takes a village to raise a child, and family values or not, we had better find some common ground and learn how to stand together.

Dogfights Over Westhampton Beach Fascinate Local Residents There

By Jerry Cimisi

This past Columbus Day, two planes between three and four thousand feet high were in an aerial dogfight over the waters just southeast of Westhampton.

Well, it wasn't an actual dogfight with live weapons, and no one was at war here. It was the sort of thrill-seeking combat produced by an outfit called Air Combat USA, in which two competing SR Marchetti 260s try to score "hits" on one another via laser beams.

Since it was founded in 1989, Air Combat USA says it has put 30,000 "aces" up into the air all over the country. John Kaiser of Seaford and Herman Gross of Great Neck tried their hand that Columbus Day.

"I like to prove I can still do anything at my age," said Mr. Gross, who is 87. "I got three hits, he got two. Though the point is not winning, it's the exercise itself."

John Kaiser, 51, a marketing VP, recalls the score a little differently. "There were six separate engagements. He had three and I had three."

Gross said he had done better the previous time he had tried this fighter pilot simulation — when he was eighty and took off from Brookhaven Airport. "I had seven hits then; I don't recall what the other guy had."

Gross, who is a pilot (but, he says, not a very experienced one), was a radar officer in the sure, there was no problem."

In fact, Air Combat USA advertises that, for participation in its dogfights, "No pilot's license required."

Kaiser, who is also a pilot (though he said he does more boating than flying now) related, "It might actually be harder for a pilot, because you're trained to keep a plane level. Dog fighting has you making wild maneuvers. So nonpilots actually do better."

As for the "hits": each fighter pilot operates a laser gun with a scope. When the scope indicates you've struck the other plane, a trail of smoke bursts out of it.

"I don't know how they do that," said Gross. He added, commenting about the number of hits, "In a real fight there wouldn't be a score; the pilot who hit the other guy first would be coming back."

ing back."

Kaiser said he always loved airplanes and flying. "I grew up in New York City. For a while I was at a company near an airport in New Hampshire. That sealed it. That's where I

A Bet On The Outcome Of The Red Sox-Yankees Series Has Consequences

Written by one of

By Emily J Weitz

It all started when I made a bet I couldn't lose. This bet has been a safe one to make for the past 86 years. When my friend Brandon held out his hand to me in early September, challenging me to shake on it, I laughed at him. Who's going to go further in October — the Yankees or the Red Sox? I grabbed his hand and shook — I'll bet on the Yanks every time. The stakes? A creative dare to be determined by the whim of the winner. Oh, the plans I had for Brandon.

We all know how October panned out. I was sitting back, brainstorming various antics that I could make Brandon do for my amusement: mooning a truck driver on Rte. 27, going to a bar one evening dressed as a woman... The Yankees drove my creativity as they spanked the Red Sox in Game 2, 18-4. I was starting to feel a nagging sense of pity, I must confess, as the Yankees took the first three games, and the Red Sox fans at Fenway stood with fingers crossed and unwavering eyes. But a bet's a bet, and pity would not be a factor when it came time for Brandon to pay up.

When the Yanks lost Game 4, I didn't break a sweat. In fact, it made me even sorrier for the Red Sox fans, whose persistent faith had carried them through decades of heartbreak, most often at the hands of my handsome boys in pin-stripes, from Babe to Bernie. Games 5 and 6 didn't faze me, because the rivalry deserved the drama it always demanded. Actually, it wasn't until the second out of the ninth inning of Game 7 that it even occurred to me that this might be a bet I wasn't going to win. I looked down at my crossed fingers, noticed my faithful stare, and tried to shake the feeling, for that moment, of identifying with the Red Sox fans of three generations.

Now that series is history. The Red Sox reversed the curse. Last Friday night, I had a little soiree at my house. A bunch of my friends were sitting on the deck, braving the chill to gaze at the stars of a crystal clear night. That's when Brandon decided it was time to make me pay.

"Hey, Emily, you still owe me a dare," he said. I grew quiet. Slowly, I nodded.

"What's it gonna be?" I asked, all the bravery I could muster in my unwavering voice.

"I dare you to go swimming right now."

I pulled the blanket, which I had hauled onto the deck, tight around my shoulders. Our other friends tried to protect me.

"Brandon, it's really cold," said Derek. Brandon shrugged.

Blitzen Flu

"Santa Claus Can't Get a Flu Shot 11/8/04
Associated Press

DENVER, CO. - Apparently there is no special exception for Santa — at least not for flu vaccines. Nick Pallotto, 62, who plays Santa Claus in malls, turned up at a flu clinic in Colorado Springs and was denied a shot because he wasn't 65 or suffering from a chronic health problem.

"They asked me if I was 65, and I said, 'No, but I am Santa,'" he said Saturday.

For the past four years Pallotto has worked as Santa Claus at malls in New Jersey and Denver. Pallotto said he gets a flu shot every year because he has so much contact with children. More than 10,000 kids were on his lap last year.

"He does not fit any of the high-risk categories set down by the CDC. We couldn't break the rules just for Santa," said Chris Valentine, spokeswoman for Memorial Hospital in Colorado Springs. "Don't quote me on this because I really want a nice present this year," she added.

This whole flu shot scarcity scare has just gone too far when Santa can't get a shot! If being a Mall Santa doesn't put you in a high flu risk category, what the candy cane does? That's like saying a deep sea fisherman doesn't need a life jacket! Or Donald Trump doesn't need more money! How obvious can it be that playing Santa is a dangerous profession this season? Hundreds of sneezy and coughy kids climbing in and out of your lap has to expose a man to everything from teething rash to bubonic plague. These brave souls are playing Russian Roulette and the noses are loaded...

Has the CDC ever done a study correlating the hours a man spends in Santa mode with the amount of sick days he uses in December? I bet millions of men across this country are Santa to large and small groups of pathogen infested pediatrics.

Not to mention that all those germs congregating on one individual probably makes Santa a breeding ground for new entirely variations of influenza. The only up side would be as each new flu was generated, we could give them cute names in sequence, like hurricanes. The first would be the Prancer flu, the second, the Dancer flu, then the Comet flu, Vixen flu, etc. ending with the Rudolph flu because he never fit in the song.

How many labor hours have been lost by these victims of the little people and how has it affected the American Economy? What is the trickle down loss from the trickle down noses? Alan Greenspan could spin this information into yet another economic theory and prediction that both stupefies and terrifies me. What if he banned Santas? Could we import them cheaper from Canada?

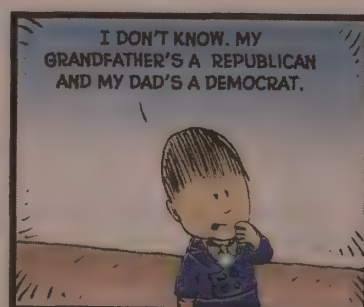

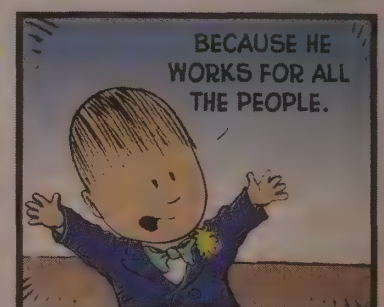

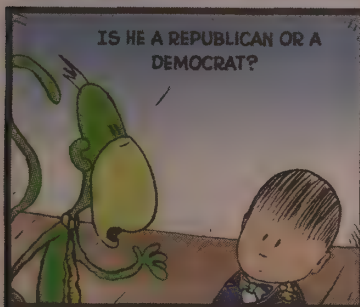

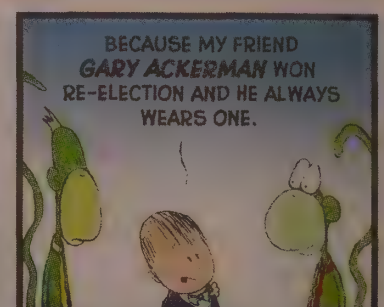

But, how silly I'm being. Of course there won't be any Santa flus, because we know what to do to prevent them. We just have to set some sanitary guidelines and initiate some sterile procedures to insure we all get through this season alive and flueless.

Henceforth, all children should be heated to 240 degrees for fifteen minutes one hour prior to seeing Santa. That alone will kill a lot of germs. Next, the child should be dipped in alcohol, bleach or Pine-sol to remove any residual surface bacteria. Dress the child in clean clothes and go see Santa!

Santa's should wear surgical masks to be changed every tenth child. Also, Santa should don disposable rubber gloves to be changed between each child.

Cheek kissing will have to be banned. Children should not kiss Santa, nor should he kiss them.

I think that whenever a Santa can't get a flu shot, these simple precautions will keep the flu from getting him. This is important because America needs all the Santa's it can get!

By Dan Rattiner

I had lunch with Sir Harold Evans the other day. We were in New York, sitting at the Stanhope Hotel and the topic of the moment was the new illustrated book he has just authored — after three years of work — entitled They Made America: From The Steam Engine To The Search Engine. It is the second book of what is to be a trilogy. The first book, a magnificent best seller entitled The American Century, was written not about the twentieth century but the last half of the eighteenth and the first half of the nineteenth. It was about those who created the great foundations of this country, and set it upon its course. As for the new book, several sections of They Made America are currently being broadcast as a three part series on PBS.

"I've been reading bits and pieces of the book," I told Sir Harold. "But I have not read it all. I would have brought it into the City with me to read more, but, honestly, I carry a lot of stuff and this is such a heavy coffee table book. So I left it in East Hampton."

"You know an interesting thing is that the second book weighs exactly the same as the first book," he said. "Five pounds. I thought it odd because the first book was seven hundred pages, and the second book was less. But they used thicker paper. One wonders if the publisher will do the math for the third book in the series."

Harold Evans recently became Sir Harold Evans at a ceremony at Buckingham Palace, knighted because of the work he has done in journalism. I had questions about it.

"What was it like being knighted?" I asked.

"It is a wonderful experience," he said. "There were three of us, including Tim Berners-Lee, who wrote the language of the Internet. I was very pleased to be considered for this honor with him. We arrived at Buckingham Palace at the specified time, were taken to this ante-room where we were shown how to kneel. You would think this is pretty easy, but they want it done a certain way. Turns out it's important how you get back up.

"Then we were taken into the throne room. There were the two thrones, with the yeomen and the beefeaters standing behind, and a big audience at the far end. Then they started playing the National Anthem, "God Save the Queen" and the sovereign comes in and sits down. They call you by name, one at a time. You kneel, the sword is placed on your shoulder, your accomplishments are spoken about for about twenty seconds and then the sovereign speaks and you are declared a knight. After that, you rise in that certain way and, as you are now standing directly in front of the sovereign, you are allowed to have a quiet, intimate thirty-second conversation. Then, you are escorted off and it's the next person's turn."

Sir Harold was knighted by Prince Charles. Queen Elizabeth was off attending a charity dinner.

"What did you and he say?" I asked.

---

I found America to be filled with excitement. There was freedom of expression.
Mobility. Prosperity.

---

"I can't tell you that," he said. "I'm not supposed to quote what a Royal says in a situation like that."

"Oh."

Sir Harold, a handsome man in his seventies, was born in 1931 to working class parents in Ashton-under-Lyne, a mill town in central England near Manchester. The railroad ran right by the back of his house. And when the train came through, his father sounded the whistle. He was a steam train driver.

"Out my bedroom window," Sir Harold told me, "I could count 42 steel mill smokestacks."

His mother left school when she was 12; his father left school when he was 11. But they had learned on their own as they grew up.

"My father could recite Shakespeare. He was, in fact, brilliant. Both my parents considered education a very important thing. And so as a lad I read Dickens and did my compositions and I was very good at it, I think, and so I campaigned hard to be the editor of the school magazine, which, believe it or not, was an elected position. I won."

Harold also worked for the local paper.

"You have no idea how wonderful it felt to me to see my first article in a real newspaper. I was 15. I wrote a line. It read 'Mrs. Smith has won the whist drive at St. Cuthbert's Church.' And a day later, there it was. From that moment on, I never wavered from my plan to be a journalist."

Harold was 16 when World War II ended, but he felt he wanted to serve anyway so he joined the Air Force. While attending a flight training school, he founded his own publication, which he wrote and distributed. It was called the Empire Flying School Review. He returned home to live for a while, and his parents paid for him to go to typing school for several weeks. If he was to be a journalist, he would type, and quickly.

"In America, if you go through military service, you have the G. I. bill, which pays for college. We had a much more prescribed program. Only about 2% of those that applied got to go to college. But I applied. And I was selected. I went to Durham University, the third oldest in England, and took a degree there in politics and economics. Then I got a job working as a journalist at the Manchester Evening News."

In 1956, Harold was awarded a Harkness Fellowship that took him to America. He traveled around, fascinated with the size and scope of the place. He filed article after article with the Manchester Evening News. He was in Chicago when Stevenson was running for President against Eisenhower, he was in the South when radicals were campaigning for Civil Rights. He stayed in America three years.

"I found America to be filled with excitement. There was freedom of expression. Mobility. Prosperity. An amazing history. But toward the end of my stay, there was also the House Un-American Activities Committee. After three years, I decided to return home to England and hope that this paranoid and barbaric trend would play itself out, which it did."

Harold took a job as editor of the Northern Echo, the leading provincial newspaper of the time. He wrote a crusading article that resulted in a national program for the detection of cervical cancer. He was given the award for best Campaigning Journalist of the Year by the European Institute of Journalists as a result. Soon, he became editor of the Sunday Times in London, a post he held for fourteen years. In 1973, in his fourth year as editor, he learned that the drug companies were not making good on their promises to the families of Thalidomide babies, and he published this fact over their objections. They tried to stop him in court. Evans took the crusade to the European Court of Human Rights and there he prevailed. Shortly thereafter, he received many more journalistic awards.

And it was also during this period that he met his wife.

"I really got to know her first professionally," he said. "This woman, Tina Brown, had written these wonderful dramas. My newspaper gave out awards for this work every year. One of them was an award winning play she wrote that was performed at the Edinburgh Festival. I read it and enjoyed it. And so I invited her to the office and asked her to write for us. She accepted."

"Frankly, we were grooming her as our star. She interviewed Erica Jong. She was terrific."

And then we both began to feel emotions toward one another. And suddenly she went to work for our competition. It was a painful thing. But in retrospect it was the right thing. She and I were getting serious. And so we married."

In 1982, Evans left the Sunday Times and came to America. Over the next twenty years, he worked in this country as the President and Publisher of Random House trade group, the Editorial Director and Vice Chairman of U. S. News & World Report, the New York Daily News, The Atlantic Monthly and Fast Company. He resigned in 2000 to concentrate full time on two major writing and television projects.

As for Tina Brown, she came to America with him, served as editor of Vanity Fair, then the New Yorker, then a magazine she developed from scratch called Talk Magazine. Currently, she is a TV personality with her own show on CNBC, "Topic A With Tina Brown." The pair have, for a long time, been coming out to the Hamptons, and have a home here which they visit weekends as often as possible. They have two children.

Sir Harold and I talked for a while longer about his new book, They Made America.

"Why, I wondered, did America achieve pre-eminence while other well-endowed land masses lagged or failed," he said. "The answer is pluck, daring and determination."

Thus he believes that his book must be about not only inventors, but innovators.

"For example, there is Ida Rosenthal, who many credit with inventing the Maidenform Bra. But she didn't invent it. Her husband invented it. Ida Rosenthal had the marketing sense and the determination to see it through." "What was so innovative about the Maidenform bra?" I asked.

"This was in the 1920s," he said. "Steel had been rationed during the First World War. So women could not have corsets. Instead, a new style was thought up. Women would bind their breasts with flat bandages, and they would look like boys. Ida Rosenthal developed brassieres with cup sizes, with materials that could bring the curves back and return women to femininity. The idea was a tremendous success, and it transformed fashion.

"Incidentally, it was said that during the First World War, the embargo on corsets saved enough steel to build two battleships."

Among others featured in They Made America are Herbert Boyer, the San Francisco hippie and protestor who developed nuclear magnetic resonating for the health industries, and Juan Trippe, who went from owning a small Air Taxi service on Long Island and Manhattan in the 1920s to founding Pan Am airways, which, under his guidance, led the way into commercial trans-Atlantic travel by seaplane and, later, by jet.

"These people challenged the assumptions of what other people took for granted. They went down a lot of dead ends. But then, often, they would push things to the extreme, and succeed. They often were also great collaborators. Consider Thomas Edison and Menlo Park. He did not work alone."

In his book, Evans chose to profile 70 individuals who made contributions between 1865 and 2000. Among them are Joan Ganz Cooney ("Sesame Street"), Edwin Howard Armstrong (the modern radio), Estee Lauder (cosmetics), Jean Nidetch (Weight Watchers), Thomas Edison (electricity), George Eastman (photography) and Pierre Omidyar (eBay.)

They Made America debuted on PBS on Monday, November 8 with a two-hour segment on Ted Turner (CNN), Russell Simmons (Def-Jam), John Fitch (steamboats) and Lewis Tappan (Dun and Bradstreet). On November 15, there is a segment on Amadeo Giannini and his Bank of America, and Ida Rosenthal and the Maidenform Bra. The PBS special concludes on November 22 with Juan Trippe (Pan Am) and Ruth Handler (the Barbie Doll) The programs are at 9 p.m.

Fisheries Service and the Army Corps of Engineers.

The Engineers who would actually do the work, have already been contacted about the situation. They said that paperwork would have to be filled out, but they could not even consider the matter until the end of 2006 at which time they intend to have completed a study about erosion along the ocean from Fire Island to Montauk Point. Except that President Bush has cut back on the funding now so it will probably even take longer than that, and it is too soon to say how much extra time that will be.

"These people are completely out of touch with reality," Town Supervisor Heaney said.

Ammon. In the early stages of this bitter divorce, it had been decided that Ammon would use the summer mansion in East Hampton for one month, and Generosa and Pelosi would use it another month. It was during a month when Generosa and Pelosi were out that, according to the testimony of a surveillance company executive, Pelosi called him and arranged for a video surveillance system with pinhole cameras that could not be noticed to be installed at the house. Pelosi would spy on Ammon, and do so by remote control. The surveillance executive arranged a sophisticated system where at any time Pelosi could turn on a laptop computer wherever he was and see what was going on in the East Hampton house. The surveillance expert said he was told by Pelosi not to tell anyone else he was doing this, and to give only him the code to remotely activate it.

On the day he was murdered, Ammon went to a local store in East Hampton and bought silk bed sheets. He then had a steak dinner at the Farmhouse Restaurant alone. Then he went home, called his longtime friend in Water Mill, went upstairs and went to sleep.

The longtime friend said she had come out to Water Mill from the city with her boyfriend and another man on Friday night, and she had spoken to Pelosi on the phone in East Hampton a few times. Then she said she had an errand to run, left the house, drove to East Hampton and had sex with Ted Ammon in his house. Then she went back to Water Mill. The next day, Ammon called her a few times and said he had gotten rid of the flannel sheets on the bed because they bothered him, and had gone out and gotten very expensive silk sheets that he liked better. He also said he had gone down to the

"You don't have to do it, Emily," he said. "But I dare you." A smirk rested on his lips. I took a deep breath.

"Let's go," I said. I jumped up, ran downstairs, and grabbed two towels, a sweatshirt, sweatpants, and fuzzy socks. Derek went out to heat up the car. Brandon headed to the water on foot.

The end of my street opens up into a serene alcove of Gardiner's Bay. The salty water laps up on a stony beach. We pulled up, headlights shining on my icy fate.

"I'm a little scared," I confessed to Derek while Brandon was still out of earshot. But then I removed the heap of clothing that I had draped over my bare skin. In my bathing suit, I stepped out of the warm truck into the midnight November air, bare feet on cold pavement. No hesitations. Now or never.

I ran, leaping off the pavement and over wet, tory. Che goes to Cuba, hooks up with Fidel Castro, returns to South America and rallies the peasants to create armies to try to overthrow the banana republic governments. Soldiers from one of those governments, however, aided by the CIA, find Che and kill him. He is only 36 years old.

A few days before seeing this film, I read the text of Osama bin Laden's videotaped speech. I read it largely because, and I think many Americans feel this way, I do not know what it is that these terrorists want. During the Carter administration, they kidnapped American embassy workers in Iran. America was the Great Satan. What did they want? In Seattle eight years ago, demonstrators rioted, causing billions in property damage and deaths to innocent people, because the World Trade Meeting was in town. What the hell was that all about? And what do these people want who attacked the Twin Towers?

Osama bin Laden, who is a murderer, said the following:

"We fought with you because we are free, and we don't put up with transgressions. We want to reclaim our nation. As you spoil our security, we will do so to you.

"We saw transgressions and the coalition between Americans and the Israelis against our people in Palestine and Lebanon, and it occurred to my mind that we deal with the towers. These personal events that directly and personally affected me go back to 1982 and what happened when America gave permission for Israel to invade Lebanon. And assistance was given by the American sixth fleet.

"We found no difficulties in dealing with the Bush administration, because of the similarities of that administration and the regimes in our countries, half of which are run by the military and half of which are run by monarchs. Our experience is vast with them. And those two kinds are full of arrogance and the taking of bribes.

"Your security is in your own hands. Any nation that does not attack us will not be attacked."

From his perspective, his "lands" are those where Muslim have lived their lives for centuries, working the land, raising families, enjoying friends and their children, living in huts, milking goats and obeying the law. The law of the Koran. Osama, like Che before him, sees western society as the enemy to be killed because we have come from afar, are strangers in his land and have new ideas. Personally, for him, this is a threat to the power wielded by religious leaders and other tribal chiefs. The power instead would be wielded by businessmen from the west or the businessmen from other Muslim countries who want to play the game with the West. (Limousines, tanks, racing cars, bribes, oil. Think Saddam Hussein.)

Ah yes, oil.

How quickly we confuse the protests against the Vietnam War — which did not involve oil — with the war in Iraq, which is, in fact, about the lifeblood that runs this country. We're out of oil now. Sorry. We need yours. And we would be happy to pay for it, even if it means that the new Arab elite runs around in the aforementioned limousines, fast cars and big yachts.

We on the coasts forget that the beauty of our governing system is not that it is more idealistic or free than any other, but that it allows for personal participation and has a three-branch system of checks and balances that forces everyone involved in one branch to have their greed be monitored by those from one of the other branches of government, and, in the worst cases, reigned in.

In other words, as human beings, we in nighttime sand. My feet touched the water, then my ankles and calves were submerged in the chill. I ran further out, splashing myself in the moonlight. The water remained 2 1/2 feet. I turned around, about 25 feet from the shore. "It's too shallow!" I shouted. I saw their silhouettes against the bright headlights of the truck.

"Just drop!" Brandon shouted. And I did. As if struck by a stun gun, I collapsed, horizontal, in the shallow water, my hair flowing across my face.

I leapt up.

"Ahhhh!" I screamed, the cold night air whipping against my soaked skin. I ran back in, swallowing up the distance to warmth as quickly as my long strides could carry me. I fell into the dry, fluffy towel that Derek held open for me.

"Thank you," I said breathlessly, and I ran towards the car. Brandon called after me.

"Hey, Emily," he said. "Payment received. You'll get your receipt in the mail."

I glanced over my shoulder and shrugged.

"My word is my bond," I said with a smile as I slid into the front seat of the truck and basked in the heat as it blasted from the vents. I gazed out the window at the stars standing in the icy sky. Maybe an 86-year old curse can be broken with a single pitch, but my word is my bond.

America are no better than anybody else. We just have a better way to govern ourselves.

The bottom line is that the war we are engaged in is about who gets to run things. Twenty years ago, if we didn't run things, it would have been the Communists. Today the Communists are gone, and we're who are left and so they want us out too. But we cannot leave because of oil and because of Israel. And they know it.

It is one thing to talk about all this and continue to talk about it until some compromise could be fashioned to preserve the old ways and the new together. It is another to create terror, murder innocent people and start a war about it. But that's what Osama has done.

The American people have voted that this war cannot be allowed to stand. And they have elected a rather flawed man to fight it, a man with great and perhaps dangerous resolve, who shares the American values of the midlands. He has been voted better for this task than the other guy. And now we move on. • beach to walk around later that day but had run into several gay men out there who were hostile toward him. Then he too went home. And that was how he spent his last evening.

On Sunday, the Water Mill friend again called him several times but got no answer. Concerned, she had driven over there with a friend, and she had tried the front door which was locked, and the friend said, well, Ted's probably gone off somewhere, don't worry about it. The bloody body was upstairs in the bedroom at this time.

It was not discovered until Monday morning.

After the murder but before his arrest, Pelosi moved with Generosa and the children to an estate in England which Ammon owned, and where Generosa Ammon was diagnosed with terminal breast cancer. She died six months later, after getting Pelosi to sign a post-nuptial agreement limiting his claim on the Ammon estate to two million dollars. The remainder would go to the children. Pelosi was to use his two million to hire a lawyer to defend himself if he were to be accused of murdering Ammon.

During the trial these past few weeks, more than a dozen people have testified against Daniel Pelosi, stating that he, Pelosi, told them about the crime, had asked them to do something for him since the crime, or had done suspicious things prior to the crime.

Pelosi's sister testified about monitoring the laptop, and that she called Pelosi so he could come over — they all lived in Manorville — so he could replay watching Ammon at the house. She said that after viewing Ammon, Pelosi had called over a friend and that he and the friend got in the friend's pickup to drive to East Hampton. It was one o'clock in the morning, the night of the murder.

An ex-girlfriend said Pelosi told her he had killed Ammon and that if she told anybody he had done this, she would never see her children again. She also said that he asked her to lie about his whereabouts during the night Ammon was killed and tell the authorities he was with her. Pelosi's father testified that after the murder, Pelosi had called him to ask how he might get rid of something so nobody would find it. The father said he didn't know. In jail after being accused of the crime, Pelosi confessed to the crime to several fellow prisoners, one of who went with this information to the warden. To confirm it, the authorities asked the prisoner if he would be willing to wear a tape recorder in the hopes of hearing Pelosi confess again and he said he would, did, and Pelosi confessed again.

On this tape, lawyers reported to the judge, Pelosi offered cash to this prisoner if he could arrange for somebody on the outside to harm any of the prosecution witnesses who planned to testify against him. The police have a video of Pelosi's current girlfriend — who was pregnant at the time — handing cash to this prisoner at the Riverhead McDonalds, where the prisoner, on parole, met up with her. The police also have, on audiotape, Pelosi trying to arrange that harm should come to the children of the County Prosecutor who was bringing the case against him.

About five people testified that before the murder Pelosi had told them that Ted Ammon was short changing Generosa in the divorce settlement — they were only a week or two away from signing an agreement — and that somebody ought to bash his head in.

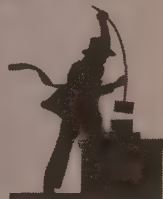

Another witness said that before the murder, Pelosi told him that he would kill Ammon, marry Generosa, wind up with the money, and return to his first wife. But he didn't believe him.

The lawyer who represented Generosa when she was trying to work out a post-nuptial agreement with Pelosi said that originally Generosa wanted to give him just one million. But Pelosi told the lawyer, privately, that he had removed the hard drive from the estate on the night of the murder and it had damning information about Generosa's role in the affair. The offer changed to two million.

It's hard to defend a man who talks like this. But his lawyer, Gerald Shargel, is trying. At one point, Shargel said, "If Danny Pelosi doesn't have anybody to talk to, he talks to a lamp shade. But that doesn't mean he killed anybody." More recently, Shargel, after listening to more of what people said that Pelosi said, remarked "this isn't over."

And it isn't. Last Thursday the trial was stopped in its tracks and postponed for the day after Shargel complained that the Pelosi family believed Generosa was a witch that had placed a hex on the Pelosi family.

ARTIST of the WEEK

Shelter Island Watercolorist
Olive Reich Celebrates Nature,
Pleasure, And Peace

"Old Glory" by Olive Reich

Water color artist Olive Reich, who maintains studios in Brooklyn and Shelter Island, has for many years studied the intricate colors, shapes and patterns of nature. "The beauty of transparent watercolors is that you can play with areas, designing them and letting the glow move through your painting," says the artist.

Many of Ms. Reich's works represent pastoral images of the North Fork and Shelter Island, and many of these peaceful scenes include images of the American flag, a symbol some have come to regard with mixed emotions during these turbulent times.

"The real purpose of art is the state of caring," says Ms. Reich. "I want to take those who look at my work away from the anxiety of worldly upsets and problems, and give them some joy. Every day the media barrages us with terrible events that create stress and sadness within us. I want my paintings to give viewers a chance to see things in order and goodness. We need, spiritually, to take more time to appreciate the wonders of nature and the ordinary beauty of everyday things. I hope in some small way that I have been successful in this purpose."

Ms. Reich's work is available through several East End galleries, including Tricia's Gallery in Westhampton Beach and RedfordGallery in Quogue on the South Fork, and at Island Home Gallery in Shelter Island. Visit www.oliveart.com or call 718.680.3269.

North Fork ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

Small Works At Blue Door Gallery

We've all heard of the interaction between a tourist and a native New Yorker: the tourist asks, "How do you get to Carnegie Hall?" and the New Yorker answers, "Practice, practice practice."

How about a variation? How do you have a successful art gallery? Answer: "Location, location, location."

While we don't mean to sound obviously flip and while there are many determinants for success, location is still a relevant place to start. Location is also relative. Who would have thought that New York's Chelsea would become the popular art venue that it is, considering its drab surroundings? It's certainly not your upscale neighborhood normally associated with art. Again, an obvious observation.

Riverhead's Blue Door Gallery is also a study in location, but the setting reinforces a different notion connected to art: non-mainstream. Situated in a small passageway off Main Street, the gallery's neighbor is the Eastenders Coffee House, which is a slightly funky place, often augmented by poetry readings and band performances.

The Blue Door isn't exactly funky, but it evokes fun and a warm ambience, nevertheless, with its pottery, jewelry, small art works and a real artist's studio where gallery owner Sandi Woessner creates her pieces.

The venue's current exhibit presents gallery favorites, works by Alan Bull, Rosamaria, Laura Stroh, Chris Stavropolis, Ms. Woessner, and John Ruggieri. Particular favorites of this critic include Mr. Stavropolis' local landscapes, such as "Rocky Beach," and his Greenport vistas that evoke a grey, misty mood. We also like Mr. Bull's closer view of progress in the form of construction vehicles.

But what we especially like about the Blue Door is its willingness to show pieces besides landscapes, a staple of most North Fork galleries. Thus, we have a variety of styles, subjects and media from competent artists who are often imaginative and technically proficient.

Consider, for example, works by Dublin Durler in the Gallery's last show. Ms. Durler, a recent Pratt graduate and now Ms. Woessner's assistant, manifests the diversity, creativity and competency that we're talking about. Many pieces border on the surreal, like her one featuring a voodoo ritual; her dexterity is also invigorating, extending to acrylics as well as to pencil and pastel.

Laura Giugni-McGuire's silkscreens in the previous exhibit are similarly promising, her worm's-eye-view giving power and festivity to a domicile that's obviously not in Long Island. We want to know more about its location and the people who inhabit it. That's encouraging for any artist.

The current show opens on Nov. 13 at the Blue Door Gallery at 40 East Main Street, Riverhead. Tel. 631-208-8166. Marion Wolberg Weiss, whose Art Commentary column appears weekly in Dan's Papers' Arts & Entertainment section, is a guest columnist here in Dan's North Fork.

At Home in the Vineyard
With David Page and Barbara Shinn

Last Saturday, on a cool, blustery afternoon, I joined two dozen fellow Long Island wine lovers for a vineyard tour and tasting at Shinn Estate Vineyards, hosted by vineyard owners David Page and Barbara Shinn.

Walking among their recently harvested Cabernet Franc vines, Page offered a brief history of the vineyard, the grapes they grow, and the sustainable, nearly-organic farming practices they employ. They don't use any herbicides, and almost all of their fungicides are organic. They also don't cultivate the land at all, feeling that "turning the soil over literally kills it."

But their unusual approach doesn't end there. They go even further, using innovative practices to nurture the kind of insects, bacteria and fungi many growers hate. "Diversity is the name of the game," said Page. He believes that by caring for the soil and for these organisms, they promote a unique terroir that really comes through in the wines.

As veterans of the restaurant business — they own Home restaurant at 20 Cornelia Street in Greenwich Village — Page and Shinn are no strangers to hard work, which is a good thing considering they are intimately involved in every aspect of their vineyard, including pruning each and every vine themselves. "Even if it takes most of the winter with just the two of us," Page said.

Spend any time with Page and Shinn, and you're sure to feel like you're enjoying an afternoon with lifelong friends. Their passion for their vineyard, their "number one love," is obvious, shining through in their infectious smiles, which glow brightly as they chat about their vines and their different pruning methods for different varieties.

THE OLD HOUSE...A National Historic Landmark
ON THE VILLAGE GREEN - CUTCHOGUE, LI, NY

— THE OLD HOUSE CAPITAL CAMPAIGN —

More than 350 years after it was built in 1649, and nearly 65 years after it was originally restored in 1940 for Southold town's tercentenary celebration, The Old House on the Cutchogue Village Green requires major repairs costing nearly $350,000. With the assistance of the Cutchogue-New Suffolk Historical Council, our preservation partner, the capital campaign has reached 50% of its goal and permitted us to complete Phase I of the project. Now we are seeking support to finish Phase II so this National Historic Landmark will be ready for its grand reopening next summer.

The meticulous work they do in their vineyard, which is "where it (great wine) happens," is apparent in each of their small production, artisanal wines.

The 2002 Young Vines Merlot ($24), a blend of 89 percent Merlot, 5 percent Cabernet Sauvignon, 3 percent Cabernet Franc, 2 percent Malbec, and 1 percent Petit Verdot, is their first wine made with their own grapes. This perfectly blended, unfiltered red is nearly opaque with a rich, purple tinge – the result of the Malbec. Full, round and expertly balanced, it offers nice black plum and berry fruitiness with hints of vanilla cream. With feather-soft tannins and well integrated oakiness, this is a delicious addition to Long Island's roster of great Merlots.

Under Shinn Estate's second label, the Home white table wine Chardonnay 2003 ($14) is decidedly un-California in style. Never seeing an oak barrel or malolactic fermentation, it's bright, rich and fruity, with Anjou pear and crisp apple flavors augmented by subtle butterscotch and caramel notes. A well-crafted, Long Island-style Chardonnay for anyone who thinks they don't like Chardonnay.

Shinn Estate Vineyard wines are available at Home (which only serves East Coast vino), via their mailing list and at the end of vineyard tours, which are held Saturdays at 3 p.m.

For more information or to order wines visit www.shinnestatevineyards.com or call 631-804-0367. If you're interested in a tour and tasting, call ahead, they are getting more and more popular every week.

Away At School... By DAVID LION RATTINER

The Interview

Well, it has come down to this. I am in my senior year at Northeastern University and am graduating soon. Obviously, I will have to have a little party of some kind to celebrate leaving college, but it is a little blurry as to what is going to occur after that. Naturally, I have started to look into jobs that I could possibly take when I graduate. One way to do this is to attend a career fair.

A career fair is basically when a bunch of employers meet somewhere and take resumes from college kids. Northeastern held a career fair about two weeks ago and I showed up, ready for action.

One of the guys that I gave my resume to started telling me about the job as a financial advisor for Northwestern Mutual. You might ask, financial advisor, what the hell is that? Well, to be honest with you, I wasn't really too sure what a financial advisor is or does either, but I thought the job sounded pretty bad ass, so I gave the Northwestern guy my resume and didn't think much of it. About a week later, I got a phone call, "Hello, David?"

"Yes."

"Hi, it's Steve from Northwestern Financial. We met last week."

"Oh, yeah. How's it going?"

"It's going good. I have your resume here and was wondering if you would be interested in coming down to the office for an interview."

"Yeah, sure, just let me get a pen so I can write this down."

About a week later, I was off to the interview. I started thinking about the title financial advisor and thought it sounded so awesome. I am an advisor of finance, an expert if you will. If you got money, I can advise. What the hell is a financial advisor? On the train to the Northwestern Mutual office I started thinking about how great my life was going to be once I got this job.

I got to the Northwestern Financial office wearing my friend Jim's suit, which I borrowed because I don't have a suit of my own. I checked in with the front desk lady who had me wait in the waiting area, where there were about five other guys and two girls, all about my age, waiting to be called in. This was ridiculous. I started to get really nervous and realized that I should probably find out what a financial advisor does. I whispered to the guy next to me, "Hey you. Do you know what a financial advisor does?"

"It's basically another word for stockbroker. They sell financial products and work off commission."

Damn Harvard kids, I thought. I started to think about this and was realizing that this job might be a lot harder in today's day and age. Today, you can just go on the Internet and buy stocks and other financial products really cheap and easy, all on your own. People use the Internet now to invest. How the hell was I going to compete with that?

I started getting panicky. Was this the career for me? Do I really want to stay in Massachusetts when I graduate? Does this job pay well? What if I can't find anybody to invest through me? Were they even going to like me in the first place? I wanted to ask questions, not get asked questions.

"Mr. Rattiner, you can come in now."

I felt like I was in a doctor's office. I walked into the office, nervous as hell, ready to tell this guy anything. He is probably going to say, "Tell me about yourself." I am going to make sure to tell him how I was born to work hard and how I feel weird if I don't work hard. I better not ask him about vacation time because that will look bad.

"So, Mr. Rattiner, tell me about yourself."

"Well, thank you for asking, Steve. First of all, let me tell you that I was born to work hard. I feel strange when I am not working. Like watching television is a waste of time for me. I would rather be working on the television, like changing the channels for someone. You know, things like that. This is just an example. I'm not saying that I watch a lot of television. I don't really like reality TV anymore."

"I see."

"But have you seen some of these shows? They are ridiculous. They humiliate people. But I've got to be honest. If I got picked to be on one of those shows I would do it. That's another thing about myself. I'm honest. I'm honest and I don't like reality television."

We talked for about twenty minutes, about nothing really interesting except for reality television. Steve finally got up, said good-bye to me and then told me that he wanted to schedule a second interview, which we did. When I walked out of the office, I felt like looking at all of the Harvard kids and yelling IN YOUR FACE, but I didn't, I just walked out. A second interview, this is what I am happy about. I don't know what else they are going to learn about me the second time, but if this doesn't work out, there is always lifeguarding.

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Chocoholics Score Big

I've just finished the last of my (soon to be) mother-in-law's leftover Halloween candy. I took the chocolate. She gave it to me to take home. It's too many Weight Watchers points. The Snickers are gone. The Reese's are gone. Even the Three Musketeers minis are finished. I eat them one by one, by the handful, whatever – but if they're there, I eat them. All day. I'm a reasonably fit person, not necessarily healthy, but trim enough not to be concerned. Most people can relate. Chocolate is delicious to almost everyone. It's one of the things, like cigarettes, that I can't get enough of. The NISE Project cites the research of one Adam Drewnowski of the University of Michigan. He found that chemically blocking receptors for opiate chemicals produced by the brain decreased the consumption of high-fat chocolates by compulsive, or "binge," eaters by more than half. So, like the cigarettes I love, chocolate is addictive like heroin. It effects our brain chemistry. That may be why The 7th Annual Chocolate Show in New York this weekend will draw desperate and fanatical crowds like drug dealers in Alphabet City.

"The ultimate festival of world class exhibitors, chefs, demonstrations, chocolate fashions and children's corner," will be open to the public November 11th-14th at the Metropolitan Pavillion and Altman Building on the West Side. DIFFA Design Industries Foundation opened the festivities on Wednesday with their Chocolate Fashion Show to benefit their fight against AIDS. Unfortunately, by the time you read this, the showcase of couture made from the sweet bean will be over, but there's much more to see and taste. Over 75 international chocolate manufacturers and retailers will run booths displaying samples of their products to taste and buy. Nowhere else in the city will you find such a diverse and luxurious selection of chocolate bliss. Over 65 cooking demonstrations by top pastry chefs and chocolate masters are scheduled to show the limitless uses for chocolate and to teach you how it is made and prepared, and the deeper nuance that comes from true understanding and respect of our favorite vice.

Every year, the chefs and masters participate in the annual Chocolate Show by creating showpieces and sculptures from – you guessed it – chocolate. Bill Yosses, of Citarella, created a chocolate milk fountain last year along with many sculptural masterpieces from geniuses around the globe. An educational display follows the production of a chocolate bar from its beginning as a cocoa pod. Panels with photographs and information illustrate the step-by-step process of creating this mouthwatering treat. Chocolate, like wine and cigars, has a variety of quality levels. At the more premium tier, it also has to be stored at proper humidity and temperature to keep it fresh. The displays should provide a deeper insight into what goes into creating the best of the best. The Esprit des Alpes Culinary Theater and the Viking Range Culinary Theater are the sponsored locations for these demonstrations, including a hands-on demo managed by the Institute of Culinary Education.

If kids don't like chocolate enough already, the show has a Children's Corner just for them. Hands-on cooking classes and storytelling should keep them entertained. If your child has a bit of a vandal inside, a safe and destruction-free activity is the FooDoodler demonstration. The FooDoodler is a patented marker made to draw on food with edible ink. Watch as they draw on everything from bagels to marshmallows and cookies. For more art fun, portrait artist Chant Roston will teach young ones how to do self-portraits in chocolate. Finally, a full schedule of authors at the Barnes & Noble Cookbook Store Booth will sign and discuss their books dedicated to the subject.

The craving is always there. It asks you, it begs you – it commands you to go. Succumb to the urge. Climb onto the Jitney. Maybe bring a Hershey bar to tide you over until you get the big fix. Lick your lips in anticipation. If this sounds like you, The Chocolate Show is something you shouldn't, or couldn't, miss. Maybe you're more reserved in your addiction. Maybe you're a chef or a lover of the finer things. There are a lot of reasons to go. Free chocolate is just one.

The 7th Annual Chocolate Show is bringing its sweet, sweet, love to Manhattan this weekend, November 11-14, at 125 W. 18th Street (between 6th and 7th Avenues.) Show hours are 10 a.m.-7 p.m. daily. For a complete schedule of exhibitors and events, visit www.chocolateshow.com or call (212) 889-5112.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Over the last few months, you have read my comments about various design elements on automobiles, esoteric details like grills, headlights and taillight design. This article will focus on the best of the best in automobile design details.

When it comes to grills, both Rolls Royce and Mercedes own the highway. When one of these babies pulls up into your rear view mirror, you instantly know what kind of car is tailgating you. What Rolls and Mercedes have done design-wise is to mimic the exposed radiator of the cars built in the early days of motoring. If one really thinks about it, from the front view, all of the early cars, with their exposed radiators, looked like a Rolls or Mercedes. Some of my other favorite grills are really non-grills. The gaping oval hole of Ferrari and Miata are unique in the sense that they are just attractive holes in the front of these two sports cars. The early Ferraris had an aluminum egg crate with a prancing horse in the center. The newer ones are blank. If one looks carefully at the shape of the Miata's grill, it is identical to the supercharger intake grill mounted in the belly of one of the most beautiful planes of all time, the North American P-51 Mustang. The Miata designer had to have known both cars and fighter planes.

I also have to give kudos to BMW and Chrysler for their grillness. BMW has been trying for decades to keep their kidney shaped grills in the public eye, and just lately, the Chrysler Corporation has been grilling the public. Their trout mouth grill that was first introduced on the brutish Dodge Viper found its way onto Chrysler pickup trucks and, now, even the new Magnum sportwagon. They also seem to be harking back to 1955 with the grill on the new 300 sedan. At least there is a sense of history at Chrysler.

The early Ford Motor Car Company grills of the mid thirties and early forties were also beautiful. My personal favorites were the 1939 and 1940 models. The same goes for the '39 and '40 Lincoln Continental and Zephyr, both stunning and elegant. Let's not forget the 1936 coffin-nose Cord 810, quite possibly the most creative design of the last century. What a schnoz.

The Porsches and early air-cooled Volkswagens are famous for their grill-less front ends. As I mentioned earlier, when one of these vehicles pulled up into your rear view mirror, you knew exactly what it was. With one difference. The Porsche was going to pass you, the Volkswagen couldn't.

Taillight design has come a long way. Obviously, the latest trend is for those clear plastic ones that strangely look as if the red has worn off. The boy racers actually started the trend, with aftermarket taillight lenses that started showing up on lowered Hondas and Toyotas. Lexus was the first mainstream manufacturer to use them on their IS 300 and their new 4X4. I was surprised when I saw them on the new Range Rover, and mark my words, eventually you will see them on American and German iron. Personally, I'm not crazy about them, but they are different.

Magnum

Speaking of aftermarket, custom wheels are very hot. This trend has morphed into mainstream automobile scene. Many new car makers are offering wheels and tire combinations that just two years ago were unheard of. Some car manufacturers are offering 17 and 18 inch wheel and tire combinations. Be warned that when it comes time to replace this rubber, because of their oddball size, you will be buying the most expensive tires available. Also, if they are super wide performance tires, they will be very prone to damage with their low profile. So will your rims. Remember, Baghdad has fewer potholes than Manhattan.

One positive aspect of these new tires is that the more rubber one has on the road, the better the car will handle. However, look out for standing puddles in the rain, for fat tires have a tendency to aquaplane. If that happens at speed, you, the driver, will instantly become a very passive passenger, for the car will be out of control.

Lots of good stuff out there, both old and new. In my next column we will discuss them. Until then, look out for wet leaves on the road, so dangerous for both motorcycles and cars.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

PAINTING AND SCULPTURE AT ARLENE BUJESE

Discovering a predominant theme in an exhibit that has no theme is certainly a challenge for any art critic. The obvious question is, why is it important to find one in the first place?

Explicating meaning in art (a primary goal of art criticism, or at least this critic's aim) demands a context, standards by which we may measure such meaning. In some cases, a consistent, recurring message may be just the context we are looking for although it depends on the quality of the work exhibited: the higher the quality, the better chance of finding a thematic link.

There are risks involved in this approach; we may assume too much, finding connections where none exist. However, best to confront the challenges than write a boring article. It also helps that the current show at East Hampton's Arlene Bujese Gallery features quality work.

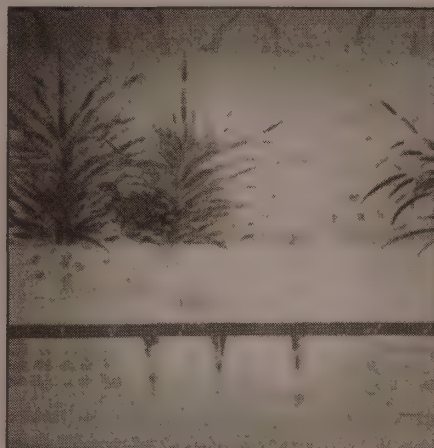

The theme which emerges is two-fold: movement and the dynamics exerted by primitive compulsions. First, let's consider movement as a primary force in works by Deborah Black. Her swirls, twists and turns are both inspiring and life-affirming, even if the primal urge is still not in control. But that's what makes the paintings so arresting.

Alex Russo's "Isla Mujeres" series is similarly abstract and the movement of the various colors is a salient factor. The effect is serene and subdued, our primal sources at peace.

"Tough Like a Cloud" by Josh Dayton does not evoke motion in the same way, although his silhouetted figures seem to dance off the canvas. What's intriguing is the way these images recall primitive traditions. Mary Abbot's "Dancers in the Jungle" conjure up similar associations.

Darlene Charneco's works, like "The Immense Journey: Three Billion Years," is a good example of the juxtaposition between movement and primeval forces. Her pieces not only envision an ancient, prehistoric landscape, but also indicate directions or movements necessary to traverse the territory. Regarding the act of traversing, Luiz Coelho's steel sculpture, "Icarus," also signifies flight and motion when the winged, mythic hero, escaping from Crete, flies too close to the sun and drowns in the Aegean. Mr. Coelho's figure is appropriately vertical (as are most of his pieces). It's interesting that Norman Mercer's three-dimensional cubes assume their motion and potency by being on a tilted angle, rather than a vertical one; Ms. Charneco's movement is horizontal.

Both Stephanie Brody-Lederman's and Margery Harnick's works signify movement and primal urges in more figurative ways, their images suggesting motion through time and space. Thus, there's a nonlinear quality that is both philosophical and personal.

The show at the Arlene Bujese Gallery will be on view until Nov. 21.

HONORING THE ARTIST: JOHN HAUBRICH

It seems that nothing deters East Hampton/New York artist John Haubrich. Not the election's outcome (which distressed him no end) or his extra responsibilities as the Art Director at Rockefeller University, or Manhattan's noise level at night. Not even his fractured arm. Even so, he doesn't take such diminished capacity lightly.

"It's better now than three weeks ago," Mr. Haubrich says with his usual enthusiasm. "I never realized how much I can't do now. Thank goodness it doesn't get in the way of my painting, and at least I don't need an operation. But I really need a servant." He laughs heartily at the thought.

It takes a lot to get Mr. Haubrich down, as our energetic and varied conversation proved. Chitchat topics bounced from the fall weather to the park at 104th Street and Fifth Avenue in New York to how he copes with traffic noises (he wears earplugs) to why he likes having a home here in East Hampton. (Obviously, there's not as much noise.)

But the genial talk extends beyond superficialities as Mr. Haubrich discusses why he liked the film Dogville, and what its theme might be. He mentions that he rented it the day after his accident; we can't imagine a more depressing movie to see when someone hurts, but evidently he took it in stride.

We're curious to know what other things Mr. Haubrich occupies his time with, regardless of a broken arm. "I read mystery books, especially the Sue Grafton series. And I do crossword puzzles. I like watching the TV show 'What Not To Wear,'" he admits, laughing a little.

Again, there are other activities that say a lot about Mr. Haubrich's diverse interests and concerns. For example, he has taken acting and yoga lessons for several years; now he's learning Italian, anticipating a second trip to Italy in the near future. "In September, we went to Rome, Florence and Venice. It was really overrun with tourists in Venice, so we avoided the popular places and found our own way."

Mr. Haubrich is finding his own way when it comes to his art as well. Known primarily for works that feature contemporary houses and architectural detail, this week's cover ("Sister One") shows a change with his turn-of-the-century residences in Beach Haven, off the New Jersey shore. It's stylized Gothic, a break from his usual design. Could this penchant for Gothic derive from his taste in mystery novels?

Mr. Haubrich has other projects in mind where he's also experimenting with diverse designs: for example, the combination of abstract and realistic styles. He's altering his palette as well.

Regarding new subject matter, Mr. Haubrich also has lots of ideas; he's currently creating a Tuscan landscape for a Tuscan museum, and he mentions a vista overlooking the Berkshires that he previously completed.

There's no doubt that Mr. Haubrich is proceeding with his life as usual: exploring all kinds of possibilities, regardless of any handicaps.

—Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mr. Haubrich's works can be seen at Southampton's Chrysalis Gallery.

Gazing into my aero-streamlined, chrome-plated rear-view mirror I can see, over the long distance, way back to the 20th Century when a 25 cent admission to the "Itch" Theatre invariably featured a biographical movie that could be serious if say the subject was Louis Pasteur (for youngsters: Pasteurized Milk – get it?) Or, it could be quite ditzy if the subject was Red Nichols and his Five Pennies (a 1920s pop jazz man). Serious or not, facts did not get in way of the story and the starring actor defined the person. Pasteur was portrayed fabulously by Paul Muni, a serious stage actor with Yiddish Theatre roots. Nichols was played by Danny Kaye from cabaret with Borscht Belt lineage. One of the oddest castings was Lou Gehrig's Pride of the Yankees, wherein the chunky New York Man of Iron was done as a Montana cowboy by Gary Cooper. Hey! It was highly successful. But –

Ray, the bio pic of the musical genius, Ray Charles ne (Robinson), who died recently, is not at all like any of the above. Its star, Jamie Foxx, who came up as a comedian, replicates his subject with such intelligent, intimate knowledge, the rock and soul legend virtually lives again – and that's a good thing. Mimicry is not in his remarkable vocabulary of Ray Charles mannerisms. He eases his own skin over the body and psyche of the master innovator and showman, recreating the wonder and flaws of the complex musician. Mr. Foxx justifiably concedes only the singing voice to actual recordings and we know how captivating that is. Ray Charles' voice reinvented music and songs we had begun to take for granted and now, his own music is so ingrained within us we fall into the acceptance of it as institutional but, it is there. After Charles' death in June, there was almost no deep grief because his audacious, highly individual talent is not silenced. The release of this excellent film gives us the added insight into the man who lost his sight at age 7, and we're able to see a bit of his soul as well as hear it.

Attempting to capture greatness in a film is chancy, at best (see past bio pics). Since, other celebrity-pop star movies cover some of the mutually expected situations as: the price of fame, the toll taken by substance abuse and workaholism – Ray glosses over those verities and carries on with the same forthright directness of Charles' songs. With that, the film centers on the '50s and '60s decades that hold his rise from emulating Nat Cole to the powerful amalgamation of blues and gospel, fused with pop standards of both races, and for city folks and country folk. Ray's director Taylor Hackford, who also co-wrote the script, has used the progression to give a vivid picture of the immense potency of African-American culture during those times, and how it has fertilized all it has been broadcasted upon.

Ray, is more than a tribute to its subject – it transcends the "tribute to greatness" ordinariness by giving us the man/ the music. They speak for themselves.

ETERNAL SUNSHINE OF THE SPOTLESS MIND

Saturdays are now becoming known as Dan's Papers' Movies Made Here FREE Film Festival Day, so remember to carefully pack your friends into your auto and get to the Ross School Lecture Hall at 9 Goodfriend Drive off Route 114, November 13th. Also remember that this season's shows are running out, and plan to arrive well before 2 p.m. to take full advantage of the occasion and arrange to stay on for delicious conversation and refreshments served up by this humble host, Guy de Fraumeni and a small legion of friends led by Sarah Halsey and Christina Robertsen. Another reminder – be there, as this week's film is most memorable.

If you have found comfort and understanding in the remembrance of a past love whether a someone, an experience or, neurotically, a trauma – it is time to relive the wonder of it. Embrace it with a sit-through of Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind. Take a detour off the information highway and settle back for a disquieting moon-shoot into a close, introspective peek at the love affair of an odd couple that travels, unravels and ravel through cloudy gloom to a forgotten space of sunny light years. "Dust be thy destiny" is a worthwhile reminder.

Some things are best forgotten, laid to rest, and allowed to smolder quietly and return to the dust that had to be whisked off, in the case of revivals. Retro entertainment like Starsky and Hutch claims the conceit of remembering the past. Nay! I say, they're only uncovering an awful television series. Copycat productions, excused as satires, are commonplace. When an original scenario pops up, we should clutch it to our bosoms, nurture it, then hold it up high, and not worry that it is over the heads of the Average Joe and Josephine. The new romantic comedy that comes in the swaddling cloth of sci-fi, Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind is the fresh babe. Parenting are Charlie Kaufman, one of the most fertile screenwriters planting seeds around today, and director, Michel Gondry, also strongly conceptual (see music videos for Bjork and the White Stripes). They have put together a refreshingly intelligent look at the art of true remembrance of things past as put forth by Mr. Kaufman. Lest our conservative friends be troubled by this same sex union, I will quickly add that cinematographer Ellen Kuras also bears a lot of the credit for the bright, little brain child.

Really swell performances by Jim Carrey and Kate Winslet give a rattling good buzz to this truly wise and enlightening send-up of our values and babyish, lolipop licking ways. Carrey is a lint-grey, lifeless guy (honest! It's a great switch) who, one day, chooses not to do his usual commute and instead takes a train to Long Island's East End whereupon he encounters the sexy flirt Kate. She has blue hair, which will change colors as swiftly as her mind about Carrey. You see – she had her mind cleared of any memory of him when their affair ended. Yes, it was over as destiny drew him to re-meet her. Their end had not been a rosy one, so Jim decided to see her doctor and get her white-outed out of his mind. The weird scientist who does the cleansing work (Tom Wilkinson) looks like a dentist, but instead of hanging a pump in your mouth he puts a wired helmet on your head and drains your brain of nostalgic drool. I realize at this point that it all sounds like dribble-drivel but, as events with Kate come into Carrey's head for dry-cleaning, the audience encounters, with him, stirring provocative sensory nudges that trigger revelatory mental twitches of the extraordinary kind. Ms. Winslet's grating, motor-mouth, flesh pot is as disarming as her character's potato doll collection and inspiration to have Jim join her flat on their backs – smack-dab on a frozen lake. He resented doing it but he did it, and it was something!

Don't you forget! Be there for this unusual trip over a disarranged rainbow.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals.

theatre review: twelve angry men...by gordin & christianano

Thanks to the Roundabout Theatre, Reginald Rose's Twelve Angry Men is making its Broadway debut. The play first appeared as an hour-long 1954 television drama for CBS

Studio One, and a few years later it was made into an absorbing Sidney Lumet film starring Henry Fonda and Lee J. Cobb. Then in 1997 the story was again made into a television film as a vehicle for Jack Lemmon and George C. Scott.

Ever since the O.J. Simpson trial, the public seems to have developed an insatiable appetite for court TV as evidenced by the popularity of "Law and Order" and live television coverage of actual courtroom trials. When the cameras are not, in fact, allowed into the courtroom, there seems to be a number of courthouse analysis programs making in depth commentary on the possible guilt or innocence of these accused murderers, and the strategies of the respective attorneys.

Apparently murder trials have a fascinating allure, so it makes sense that a look inside a fictionalized jury room at the interactions of twelve diverse jurors (played by an all star cast) deciding one man's fate, where his life hangs in the balance, would at least present the possibility of a popular Broadway entertainment, if not necessarily a compelling drama.

The intermissionless play takes place in a 1954 jury room and the adjacent men's room. The set by Alan Moyer is realistically claustrophobic, and the lighting by Paul Palazzo is also effective.

Just before the 12 men are escorted into the room, we hear the judge's instructions, "One man is dead. The life of another is at stake. I urge you to deliberate honestly and thoughtfully. If there is a reasonable doubt – then you must bring me a verdict of not guilty." He cautions, "If, however, there is no reasonable doubt – then you must, in good conscience, find the accused guilty... Your verdict must be unanimous," he reminds them.

The unfolding drama is beautifully played by an ensemble of exceptional actors. The first ballot is 11-1 to convict the 16-year-old boy, who is accused of stabbing his father to death with a knife. The lone holdout, Juror 8, who just doesn't know, feels the boy's story should be given some further discussion. The deliberations have some interesting plot twists and Rose makes many fine points about people's reluctance to think, but the progression to 1-11 against conviction in favor of acquittal is obvious indeed.

The fact remains that although Twelve Angry Men is a good play being given a professionally thoughtful staging, it is nonetheless a dated old relic, which sheds little new light on human behavior and even less on capital punishment. Rose wrote a clever psychological drama almost completely lacking in nuance. The direction by Scott Ellis, although forceful, further compounds the dilemma. There is no sense of danger in the staging. Everything is too neat, so that you sense you are watching good actors being put through their paces, and the one or two moments when something might have erupted and become messy are quickly curtailed with the resulting action left in check.

Every member of the talented acting ensemble is excellent. There is not a weak link at the table, and together they make a persuasive argument for seeing the new production. If only they had been allowed to get into real trouble, they might have convinced me and something truly exciting might have developed.

As it is, the play exists merely as a reminder of how our prejudices can allow us to easily jump to false conclusions, thus presenting a clear indictment against the death penalty. Why resurrect Twelve Angry Men at all when it has already been given more than one engrossing treatment? There seems to be any number of outstanding plays by gifted playwrights that would have made for a far better contemporary choice. In comparison to today's sophisticated television courtroom dramas, there should have been reasonable doubt the play possessed the dynamics to be mesmerizing theatre. If a play has been done well and you have nothing new to bring to the table, I think there must be reasonable doubt you won't top the predecessors.

Revisiting Grey Gardens

Anniversaries are pivotal points in the lives of people and organizations, and three weeks ago, two major anniversaries were celebrated in East Hampton. On the stage of Guild Hall, the founders and board members of LTV, this town's public access station, celebrated their 20th year. For all these years, they have provided a venue for all people of this town to express their creative ideas and programs to the public.

The meaning of public access is to have a voice of the people, and to bring broadcasting that is not driven or influenced by commercials. At the same time, LTV paid tribute to probably the most noted American documentary filmmaker, Albert Maysles of Manhattan, who is celebrating 50 years of creating independent, non-commercial films. When Maysles' literal fiftieth anniversary comes up next June, both LTV Studios and the Hamptons International Film Festival will be involved in some great parties and events associated with this big occasion. Two years ago, he received a lifetime achievement award at this film festival.

On this Saturday night, three important community leaders in the arts – Josh Gladstone, Artistic Director of Guild Hall, Jim Shelly, Chairman of the Board at LTV, and Billy Jett, Director of LTV, came together to present one of the great all-time independent films, Grey Gardens. Made right here in East Hampton, this was one of Albert Maysles' three best-known and recognized films, the others being Gimme Shelter, about the horror of the Rolling Stones' ill-fated Altamont Speedway concert in the 1970s, and Salesman, about the inner life of door-to-door salesmen, back in 1969.

Maysles is also known for another documentary, made in 1964, when he and his late brother and partner, David Maysles, recorded the first five days of the Beatles' first USA Tour. This documentary film, What's Happening! The Beatles in the USA 1964, became an instant hit, with the first-seen raw footage of this group as they hopped into a limo at Kennedy Airport, with the Maysles Brothers right beside them with their camera. Maysles recently reissued this film on a new DVD, in celebration of the Beatles' 40th anniversary last February. It also includes the Beatles' first live appearance on the Ed Sullivan show a few weeks later.

Introducing Grey Gardens in front of about 100 people, Albert Maysles, now 78, explained how he came to make this intriguing movie.

"Back when I made this movie, in 1976, I had gotten a call from Peter Beard, who was dating Jackie Kennedy's sister, Lee Radziwell, and she wanted to document something about her relatives in East Hampton, who were the Beales, living in this rundown mansion called Grey Gardens," he said. "When my brother and I met her aunt, Edie, and her cousin, called little Edie, we found them to be quite eccentric, but fascinating, and so was their relationship. They lived together for most of their lives, until the mother died and little Edie moved to Florida in her later years."

Maysles said while this movie was being shot in East Hampton, over a six-week period, he grew close to the Beale family, and he and little Edie remained friends until her death last year, in her 80s. Both Edies had a close, but also haunting mother-daughter relationship behind the decaying walls of the mansion, which they shared with many cats and even raccoons. This film premiered at the New York Film Festival, and was released on TV, and home video and DVD worldwide.

"Throughout all these years, I have gotten many letters and calls from people all over the world who are fascinated with this mother-daughter relationship, as strange as it was," said Maysles.

In a question and answer session following the 94-minute film, which was honored at film festivals from East Hampton to Cannes and Edinburgh, several local people recalled their personal stories of seeing it made. Lois Wright, a well-known host of her own show on LTV for many years, recalled actually appearing in one of the movie's birthday party scenes, back when she had black hair.

"I watched them shoot the last few weeks of this movie, and I knew Edie and her mother," said Wright. "This movie inspired me to want to create my own TV shows, where I could have fascinating people to talk to as well."

Another local resident, Connie Anderson, a real estate investor, recalled visiting with little Edie after her mother's death to help her appraise the property. For her help, little Edie gave her a table from the house, which Anderson still has.

Maysles' latest project is documenting famous artists Christo and his wife Jeanne-Claude's new work, "The Gates," an installation of 8,000 gates covered with saffron fabric placed all over Central Park, to be mounted next February. Maysles has filmed five of Christo's major art projects, including "Running Fence," 24 miles of white fabric across California, and "Valley Curtain," an orange curtain across a Colorado valley. Maysles is now seeking funding for his latest project, and for information check his website at www.mayslesfilms.com.

A Dinner Party With Ethiopian Spice

To introduce all the richness and complexity of Ethiopian cuisine would take days, so this is designed to whet your appetite (pun intended). Cooking in Ethiopia was long thought, by most westernized societies, to be nothing more than a scoop of UN rice and a little water, but that horrible stigma has finally been cast away. Today, Ethiopian cooking has found its way to America and is being extremely well received.

Because most Ethiopians are governed by strict Christian Orthodox beliefs, they spend over two hundred days a year fasting. This fasting consists of eating one meal a day, which cannot contain meat or dairy products. When the fasts are over, the feasts usually begin and meat and dairy are reintroduced to their tables.

With the rise of vegetarianism (and veganism) in the United States, it is not odd to see why Ethiopian cuisine is gaining popularity. Most of their diet consists of vegetable and legume based stews, which are high in nutrition as well as flavor. But it's the combination of vegetarian and non-vegetarian cooking that really excites me. A longtime carnivore, I am always searching for something hearty with a little spice.

Some staples of Ethiopian cuisine are Wot and Injera. Wot is a kind of stew that can consist of vegetables or a combination of meat and vegetables. There is a large variety of Wot recipes suitable for all palates and tastes, but most have one main ingredient in common: Berbere. Berbere plays an important role throughout Ethiopian cooking. It is a combination of spices and hot pepper used to add dramatic layers of aroma and heat, similar to curry powder in Indian cooking.

It is important to note that Ethiopians do not use utensils, but serve their meals in a communal style and use ripped pieces of Injera, a pancake like bread, to eat their food. This bread is made out of flour milled from Teff grain, the smallest grains in the world (which can be found in specialty stores or substituted with plain flour). The skill involved in eating with Injera takes a bit of practice, but quite frankly, once you do learn the ins and outs, you might just throw away your forks and spoons entirely.

Trying any new style of cooking is always a fun learning experience. Once you've grasped a few basic recipes you will have a solid base to explore the rest of the textural and flavorful world of Ethiopian cuisine.

Berberere (Hot Pepper spices)

Ingredients:

- 1 teaspoon ground ginger
- 1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cardamom
- 1/4 teaspoon allspice
- 1/2 teaspoon ground coriander
- 2 tablespoons salt
- 1/2 teaspoon ground fenugreek seeds
- 1 1/4 cups cayenne pepper
- 1/2 teaspoon grated nutmeg
- 1/2 cup paprika
- 1/4 teaspoon ground cloves
- 1 teaspoon fresh ground black pepper

In a heavy saucepan, toast the following ground spices together over a low heat for 4 to 5 minutes: ginger, cardamom, coriander, fenugreek, nutmeg, cloves, cinnamon and allspice. Shake or stir to prevent burning. Add the salt, cayenne pepper, paprika and fresh ground black pepper and continue toasting and stirring for 10 to 15 more minutes.

Cool and store in tightly covered glass jar. This will keep in the refrigerator for 5 or 6 months.

Recipe: Injera (Ethiopian bread)

Ingredients:

- 3/4 cup Teff flour (found in health food shops) or substitute with plain flour
- 3 1/2 cups water
- salt – pinch

Mix flour with the water then leave to stand in a covered bowl over a couple of days until it starts to bubble.

The mixture should be slightly sour and the consistency of crepe batter.

Stir in the salt. Add a ladle of the mixture to a pre heated skillet and cook slowly until air bubbles rise to the top.

Do not let it brown, and make sure that it is not too thick.

Wot (chicken stew)

Ingredients:

- 1 tablespoon vegetable oil
- 1 onion, diced

Absolutely Nuts!

When it comes to nuts, people cannot be nuttier. Let's face it, you just gotta love 'em. How can you go wrong? They are tasty, chewy, and traditional as fruit cake during the holiday season.

Most people used to think that nuts were fattening. However, a handful of nuts eaten before a meal (and in moderation) can actually help curb the appetite. Since nuts themselves take a longer time to digest than most foods, they give us a feeling of fullness.

Nuts are a real power house of nutritional energy, comprised of good fats as well as proteins, vitamins, minerals and fibers. They are the fuel that provides the body with endurance.

Their protein content supplies vegetarians with their daily protein allotment; bikers and hikers with energy boosters (which can be obtained in nut based trail mixes) to keep them going over long periods of time; and nuts provide us all with the anti-oxidant which is found in Vitamin E to help us age gracefully. The antioxidant is packed into almonds in particular.

The good fats which nuts contain (the mono and polyunsaturated) serve to protect the heart from disease by preventing bad fats from obstructing blood vessels. Walnuts, for example, are loaded with Omega 3 fats that help decrease your chances of having a stroke.

These unsaturated fats found in nuts were so helpful in lessening the risk of heart disease that in 2003 the FDA approved a qualified health claim for some nuts. It is recommended that consuming 1.5 ounces of nuts daily may reduce the risk of heart disease.

In a study done at the Harvard School of Public Health, (which was published by The Journal of the American Medical Association - 11/27/02), it was found that consuming 1 tablespoon of peanut butter or 28 g. of peanuts (or other nuts) 5 or more times a week lessened Type 2 diabetes by 20-30%.

Nuts can cut back on the threat of diabetes as they contain magnesium and fiber. These nutrients utilize the body's insulin proficiently.

How could we live in a world without nuts? It is hard to imagine. Undoubtedly, people would just go plum nuts. What would become of the local tavern if they did not serve beer nuts; baseball without peanuts; the sundae without nut topping, and worst of all, no chocolate covered nuts or caramel cashews during the holidays. Oh Nuts!

Luckily, nuts provide us with a healthy treat. What is so great about them is that they are a real modern day food. Nuts cater to our sophisticated palates with an array of tastes ranging from sweet to spicy to salty. Most importantly, however, is that nuts are readily available and easily accessible, requiring little or no preparation. Just open the bag, can or jar and there you have it - immediate gratification for modern day existence, which thrives on the "now."

Additionally, we go nuts for them simply because nuts offer such a wide variety of how they can be eaten and prepared, from garnishes for soups, spreads on celery stalks for appetizers and even tossed into salads. Nuts can be used for stuffing our holiday turkeys to adorning our string beans with almonds, aptly known as 'string bean almandine.'

They also can be eaten just about any time of the day or night. Aside from snacks, nuts can be thrown into our cereal for breakfast, be part of the ingredients for a lunch time sandwich or even be one of our popular coffees - hazelnut.

But when it comes to desserts, nothing can top the nut - from pistachio ice cream to pie crust - nuts just can't be beaten. They put the chewy into cookie, the sublime into candy, the crunch into brownies; and make any cake or pie from walnut to pecan a sinful treat with every delectable mouthful. Nuts are the ultimate fun party food, guaranteed to make you smile. Perhaps this is why in a recent article in Diet and Nutrition News, "Go Nuts for Health, Nutrition" it stated that nuts help fight depression.

For me, no nut says happy holidays better than the chestnut. I may not be roasting them on an open fire, however. I prefer the oven at a temperature of 425 degrees F. for 15 minutes, making sure before roasting to cut through the pointed top of the shell so steam can escape.

In a nutshell, go 'ahead, be a little nut! You may just reduce your chances of having a heart a'crack.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

As I visit the medley of farm stands here on the East End, I can hardly contain myself, purchasing much more than I can possibly cook within a period of time. The abundance of squash, cauliflower, leek and beets, the variety of potatoes and eggplants, zucchini, turnips, cabbage and kale and all manner of salad greens give constant reminders of all the recipes I would like to prepare.

And what about the farmers themselves? What do they like to cook with the special products they grow? And so off I went on a mission to find out what they are going to prepare for Thanksgiving dinner – and it's not always what they grow. Bette Lacina and Dale Haubrich of Under the Willow farm in Bridgehampton get a special thrill from gathering wild cranberries in a local, undisclosed destination. A whole cranberry mold will grace their Thanksgiving table when extended family and friends come to visit.

Family and friends will also convene at the home of Jackie and Tom Falkowski, of the Country Garden farm stand on Scuttlehole Road. For all the custom attached to the Thanksgiving table, Jackie Falkowski will defer to her Italian heritage and prepare her mother's cippoline and sausage, a delicious slow-cooking sweet and sour dish that will surely complement the more traditional offerings from the farm.

Johanna Halsey of the Green Thumb in Water Mill is enamored of the wholesome, nutritious and utterly simple dishes her mother, Peaches Halsey, prepares for the family Thanksgiving dinner. The farm to table dishes will include puréed rutabaga, mashed turnips, steamed Brussels sprouts, baked sweet potatoes and so much more to grace the holiday table, which patriarch Ray Halsey, with grandchildren in tow, takes great pride in decorating. Out comes the white tablecloth, the good china, the glassware and Ray's special touch of table decorations of flowering cabbages and kale. And Peaches' pumpkin pie will serve to sweeten the gathering of the clan.

BETTY LACINA'S WHOLE CRANBERRY MOLD

- 2 cups water
- 2 cups sugar
- 4 cups cranberries, about 1 pound, picked over and rinsed
- Grated orange rind from a large navel orange
- Greens for garnish, optional

1. Place the water and sugar into a saucepan large enough to hold the berries and bring to a boil. Adjust heat, then simmer the sugar syrup for 5 minutes. Add the cranberries and slowly simmer, uncovered, until the sauce is thick, about 5 minutes. Skim any foam that rises to the surface. Add orange rind and stir to mix. Pour into a mold and refrigerate, covered, until thoroughly chilled.

2. Unmold onto a serving platter lined with greens for presentation.

JACKIE FALKOWSKI'S CIPPOLINE AND SAUSAGE

This sweet and sour dish, inspired by Jackie's Italian heritage, is a family tradition at Thanksgiving.
Serves 8 as side dish

- 1 1/2 pounds small white onions, peeled
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 1 pound small breakfast sausage, cut into bite size pieces
- Low-sodium canned broth or water
- Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
- 2 1/2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
- 1 - 2 teaspoons sugar

1. To save time peeling the onions, plunge them into boiling water for 15 seconds, after the water returns to the boil. This will facilitate removing the outer skin but do not remove any of the onion layers, and leave the base intact or the onions can fall apart in the cooking. Cut a criss-cross in the core of the root end.

2. Film a large non-stick skillet with the oil and put in the sausage pieces. Sauté sausage over medium-low heat, turning them once, about 3 minutes each side. Add the onions to the skillet. Sauté for a few minutes then add enough broth or water to come up an inch or so in the pan or to barely cover the onions and season lightly with salt and pepper. Bring up to the boil, then adjust heat to low and simmer slowly with cover ajar for another 18-20 minutes, turning the onions several times while cooking until onions are tender when

PEACHES HALSEY'S PUMPKIN PIE

Of the variety of squashes available at the farm, Peaches selects either the cheese pumpkin or the Hubbard squash, which arguably make the best pumpkin pie.
Serves 10-12

2 large eggs
2 cups pureed cooked pumpkin (cheese pumpkin or Hubbard Squash)
2 tablespoons flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 1/2 teaspoons cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
1/2 teaspoon allspice
1/4 teaspoon ground ginger
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup firmly packed brown sugar
2 tablespoons Brandy
1 2/3 cup light cream

1 9-inch pre-baked pie shell

Preheat oven to 425 degrees

1. In a large mixing bowl, beat eggs until light. Stir in the pureed pumpkin.

2. In a separate bowl combine flour, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg, allspice, ginger and both sugars. Add to the pumpkin mixture and stir to mix. Add the brandy and cream and stir until completely incorporated. Pour filling into prepared pie shell and bake in preheated oven for 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 325 degrees and bake for approximately 45 minutes, or until a knife inserted into the center comes out clean. Transfer to a serving plate and, when cool, cut into wedges for serving.

The Key To Aging Gracefully

When we're teenagers, we can't wait to reach our 20s and when we're in our 20s, we can't wait to be in our 30s, and then we want to stop the hands of time. There's something magical and mysterious about allowing ourselves to age gracefully. Some people embrace it, while others fight it. We certainly can't stop the aging process, but there are many elements in our lives that can slow it down.

Age-defying products and treatments such as rich creams, chemical peels, tummy tucks, face-lifts and Botox can be a quick, and sometimes costly, fix. Eventually, we all get wrinkles, age spots, weight gain, and loss of elasticity in our skin.

We begin noticing drastic changes in our appearance every 7-10 years. A few factors that play a part in this process include stress, lack of sleep, poor diet, illness, medication, smoking and drinking (alcohol). I have a theory, so read on... If you eat poorly, and drink too much, you'll gain weight, increase your level of stress, and lose sleep, eventually leading to diminished dating, which will inevitably increase the desire to smoke lots of cigarettes. So, there we have it. Just kidding.

The world has changed, and we have adjusted. According to statistics, 60 percent of women work today, as compared to 40 percent in 1974. The twenty percent increase over the past thirty years comes with increased pressures such as raising a family, climbing to the top of the corporate ladder, and maintaining a healthy and youthful look. Ding, ding, and we question why there is an uprise in cosmetic surgery? And, this does not pertain only to women. Men have been feeling the need to do the same. Society tends to reflect what we see and read. Today, what we see are beautiful, sexy, thin, and fit men and women who project the "ideal look."

Although we know this is not realistic, it doesn't change how society "sizes" up our appearance. With each decade of aging, the scale changes for many of us. That is, unless you are dedicated to exercise and eating properly. In my personal experience, I have gained approximately five pounds every five years since my teens (with the exception of "The Freshmen 15," or was it twenty, in college?) Once the weight is added, it's difficult to shed those unwanted pounds. This is a problem for men and women and it adds to the level of frustration with ourselves and our projection on others.

When we look and feel our best, our skin glows and our attitude is positive. I recently encountered the perfect example of this, and her name is Barbara Roberts. Barbara is a 58-year-old who looks and acts twenty years younger. I was shocked when she told me her age. This successful, tall, blonde, radiant woman is proof that we can defy aging. Barbara has had her share of high career points that include working on Wall Street, volunteering for NYC arts and educational causes and being President/CEO of a management-consulting firm.

Barbara said the key to success and a sense of youthfulness is to surround yourself with people who believe in you. Positive energy will translate a positive outlook on life. Each day she asks herself several questions such as: 1. Have I laughed enough today? 2. Have I done something related to nature (walk, gardening)? 3. Have I done something to develop my mind and soul?

In addition to the proper diet and way of life, there are products on the market that will aid in the nourishment and care of your skin. Men and women have different skin. Men have thicker skin with more elasticity, while women need to start a skin care regimen much earlier. There are an abundance of high-quality skin care products on the market. The best way to discover what will work best for your skin type is to identify the problem areas.

Here are a few tips to help deal with the aging process to guide you along the way for men and women: 1. Drink lots of water, 2. Limit alcohol intake and don't smoke (leads to premature aging – will decrease facial circulation). 3. Use a good cleanser and appropriate scrub (men have 15% oilier skin). It's imperative to keep your pores clear. 4. Use a toner – it helps to keep your skin clear and firm. 5. Protect your skin – (avoid too much sun) SPF! 6. Exercise – stay in shape, 7. Maintain a healthy diet – (also take vitamins C and E).

Aging gracefully encompasses your mind, body, and soul. Here's to a healthy, happy, and youthful future.

Aromatherapy To Soothe Your Soul

If you ever find yourself curled up with a box of tissues reading The Empty Chair, Finding Hope and Joy (or one of the other infant variants), aromatherapy might be a viable and less embarrassing solution to your problems. Aromatherapy combines select fragrant substances extracted from plants, fruits, and flowers, with lotions or inhalants in an effort to enhance the body's natural self-regulating, and self-healing capabilities. This, in turn, may positively affect mood, health, physical responses, and beauty.

Aromatherapy may be practiced in a plethora of ways. The most effective ways, however, involve direct contact between the essential oils and the body. Massage has long been proven to be effective in treating one's body, both physically (improved circulation, lymphatic drainage, elimination of tissue waste, tension release, energy), and emotionally (peace of mind, tranquility, mental awareness). The oils that work best for massages have vegetable oil bases, which are rich in fat-soluble nutrients, and essential fatty acids. These oils are easily absorbed through the skin, and readily used in the body (Cel-Lite Magic is a good choice).

Another way to practice aromatherapy is through therapeutic baths. They offer a great way to unwind after a long, stressful workday. Abra Energy Tonic Bath combines some of the most effective herbs to help soothe your body. Sunspirit, the famous Australian aromatherapy company, suggests adding 5 drops of the chosen essential oil to your bath, just before turning off the taps. This ensures that most of the therapeutic aromas are not lost before you have time to immerse yourself and enjoy. On a side note, they issue a note of caution: if you tend to have sensitive skin, adding a tablespoon of milk, a natural dispersant, before adding the oils, may prevent possible irritation.

For more experienced aromatherapy practitioners, direct application can be used. However, essential oils should never be directly applied to the skin, because in an undiluted state, they are extremely potent. For direct application, Sunspirit suggests combining 5 drops of the essential oil of your choice, with 10ml of a carrier oil (Almond Sweet Oil is a fashionable choice). When trying out an oil, it is safest to first apply it to the feet, as they are the furthest from the heart. Your reaction to the oil will thus not significantly affect your heartbeat. Also, because of the thick skin, feet do not absorb oils as rapidly as other parts of the body do.

Inhaling essential oils can also be very gratifying. An easy way to inhale involves simply placing 3 or so drops of an essential oil on a tissue, and then placing that tissue near your nose. When trying an essential oil for the first time however, start with a single drop, to avoid possible adverse reactions. Steam inhalation is also a popular at-home aromatherapy practice. In a bowl, combine one liter of steaming water with 5 drops of an essential oil. Then, simply place a towel over your head, lean over the bowl, and inhale, all the while keeping your eyes closed. Steam inhalation is often used to alleviate cold symptoms (Benzoin Oil is often helpful).

Nevertheless, the key to making use of aromatherapy is not only finding the right application method, but also finding the essential oil that meets your individual needs. Essential oils are comprised of different hormones and vitamins, which in turn create different bodily effects. These effects not only vary with the botanical species used, but also between cultures and individuals. Though responses to essential oils are not universal, aromatherapists have developed a roster of scents with reasonably predictable effects. Susie Michelle Cortright, an aromatherapist connoisseur, suggests using Jasmine, ylang ylang, or patchouli, for an aphrodisiacal effect; lemon, basil, bergamot, sweet orange, peppermint, eucalyptus, or tangerine, if you are in need of energy; cedarwood, clary sage, fennel, geranium, neroli, or Roman chamomile to ease PMS symptoms; and lavender, myrrh, cardamom, cedarwood, German chamomile, clary sage, or ankinense, for relaxation, as well as stress relief.

There are many places in the New York area to purchase essential oils. Some of the most well known include Enfleurance Inc ((212) 691-1610, 321 Bleecker St), and Aveda Aromatherapy Esthetique ((212) 832-2416, 509 Madison Ave). Online, www.aromaland.com, and www.sunspirit.com.au offer extensive selections.

It is no surprise that with its infinite possibilities, Aromatherapy has become a widespread phenomenon in the New York area; why get caught reading "He's Just Not That Into You" (even if it was featured on Oprah), when you could simply soak away all of your troubles?

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Dendrobium Nobile

The orchid has always been an exotic flower for special occasions. Most people know the beautiful cattleya and cymbidium orchids from floral arrangements and corsages.

Times have changed! Virtually everyone today knows there are many orchid species available for cultivation. It is rare to visit homes on the East End without at least one orchid specimen. Today, there is considerable interest in orchid culture because the plants have proven resilient and easy to grow, and they produce stunning flowers. Orchids are now some of the most popular house plants.

Next to the phalaenopsis, one of the more popular orchids suitable for home growing is the dendrobium. Among the hundreds of named varieties, one variety — Dendrobium nobile — is a great selection for indoor culture.

The genus dendrobium contains six groups of plants organized by their growing habits, conditions, and characteristics. D. nobile falls under the first grouping of these plants that includes the deciduous orchids (those that drop their leaves). Within the classification D. nobile, there are about 100 varieties. D. nobile is known for its multi-colored flowers and sweet fragrance (can you believe it — a fragrant orchid?). This group is also called the “cane orchids” because, in most cases, the flowers grow along the bare canes of the plant (the plants drop their leaves during the dry season). In the case of D. nobile, the flowers bloom on canes with and without leaves. Originally native to Thailand, India, and the American tropics, this group of orchids likes seasonal changes and periods of wet and dry. Therein is the key to success with this plant!

D. nobile is tolerant of temperature extremes and is well suited for home growth. With a minimum winter temperature of 50 degrees or so, the plant can be grown in over-wintering homes on the East End. (Plants have been known to survive temperatures as low as about 38 degrees.) When grown in the home, the plant benefits from being placed outside before freezing weather so it can benefit from cool evening air. Subsequently, the plant needs to be placed in a cool location until buds begin to form.

If you purchase a D. nobile orchid, remember that the plant thrives with limited pot space. The plant grows best in clay pots. Situate the plant in a pot that is just slightly larger than the plant base itself. Place the plant so the growth tip is as far away from the side of the pot as possible. Use a growing medium that provides excellent drainage such as osmunda fiber, wood chips, or a combination thereof (with a little charcoal mixed in).

Water the plant heavily at first, and then keep it moist through early fall. In the late fall, the plant will require a period of drought (about a month or two of little/no water). This is a time to forget about the plant! Water just enough to keep the plant canes from shriveling. This dry period produces a large number of buds along the canes. When the buds appear, watering can resume slowly — but only water heavily in spring and summer. The result is a spectacular display of wonderfully fragrant flowers during winter to spring. If the plant produces no blooms, it is usually an indication it has received too much fertilizer and that the night-time temperature has been too warm. When in bloom, place the plant where it can be enjoyed, but remember that the blooms last for the longest time when the plant is kept cool.

When new growth appears in the spring, increase the amount of water given. Fertilize once a month from May through August with fish emulsion fertilizer. During spring and summer, provide the plant with plenty of sunlight. (This orchid can take direct sun.) High intensity light promotes active growth and the production of leaves that helps with flowering later on. During this time, the plant may also produce off-shoots from the stems. These are called “keikis,” and can be planted as new plants once they form roots. If you find the plant is producing an abundance of off-shoots and few or no flowers, try increasing the amount of light — which seems to correct this issue.

D. nobile is a delightful plant that always receives admiring comments when in bloom. While dendrobiums are not pretty plants when not in bloom, the flowers more than make up for the wait. This is certainly one plant that can receive high recommendations for the home gardener!

Summer Is Just Beginning... In Brazil

It's a country known for its love of life, music, and food. Brazil is a passionate place where flavor comes with a kick and music comes with a beat. As the winter months creep upon us, it's nice to come home to a place that breathes the life of summer. Since January in Brazil is July in the Hamptons, why not embrace the flipside of the world by warming up to the deep reds and rusty oranges of Brazilian culture? Decorate the house, whip up some Brazilian comfort food, and have some friends over to celebrate summer in Brazil. The best part of all is you get to keep the décor after the guests go home to their boring old New York winter houses. Dinner parties are a popular manner of getting friends or business associates together in a comfortable, intimate setting. Of course, traditions vary with regions and social class, but one thing remains: it is not uncommon for a Brazilian dinner to creep into the early hours of morning before breaking up.

You can expect typical Brazilian music to be playing in the background, so if you want to have a Brazilian style soiree, make sure to kick some samba tunes. Brazilian culture has origins sprawled across the Earth, and its music reflects that. Indigenous Brazilian tribes played reed flutes. The Portuguese, who carried their culture to Brazilian soil, boasted beautiful singers and string instruments. In the first century of Brazil's existence as a Portuguese colony, African slaves were introduced, and their music, thickly infused with drum beats and rhythm, contributed to the Brazilian musical identity.

Brazilian home décor utilizes accents that reflect the heritage of Brazil. When decorating a room or a home in a Brazilian style, keep the spirit of Carnival alive with papier maché masks and live tropical plants. Another important part of Brazilian culture is art, and ceramics and clay make up some of the most common and beautiful crafts. Buying one clay sculpture from a Brazilian craftsman adds flavor to your room. Often, the clay is not glazed, but left in a more natural state, though it can be brightly painted and glazed as well. Brazilian art often demonstrates scenes from daily activities, so you may find depictions of animals or religion. Brazilian cowhides are world-famous for their quality and attitude, and they make for interesting wall-hangings or rugs that certainly shout ¡Brazil!

As the guests arrive to the sounds of bossa nova, samba, or Villa-Lobos, your table might be adorned with orchids. Purple orchids are considered one of the most elegant flowers in Brazil, and if you are gracing someone else's Brazilian gathering, it would be a very kind gesture to bring one. Brazilian dinners take place between 7 and 10 p.m., and they tend to be long, slow progressions of courses. Don't be surprised if your dinner guests arrive a half-hour late; that's consistent with Brazilian culture, unless it's a business engagement, when one is expected to be on time.

Manners vary vastly from culture to culture, and it's important to be informed about the customs. Of course, if you're having a bunch of Americans over for a Brazilian-style dinner, you probably won't get caught embarrassing yourself. But for authenticity's sake, here are some of the major faux-pas you don't want to commit at a Brazilian affair.

Using the hands is considered ill-mannered and unhygienic. Whether it's pizza, sandwiches, or fruit, you have to use utensils. Wipe your mouth after every sip of your drink. This seems excessive at first, but quickly becomes second-nature. Food should always be shared, even if the portions are small. It's considered rude not to offer. Coffee

(cafézinho) is only served with breakfast. It is served at the end of other meals, and is a strong brew. The traditional Brazilian drink is a fabulous concoction that will get any party in gear. The caipirinha is a Cachaca-based cocktail. Cachaca is a liquor derived from sugar cane. Caipirinhas can also be made with rum. Feijoada, or Brazilian Black Beans, is considered the Brazilian equivalent of American "soul food." It is thought to have been introduced to Brazil in the 16th century by African slaves, and it has become integral to Brazilian cuisine. Typically, Brazilians believe that every part of the pig should be thrown into the pan, but this is generally tough for our dinner guests to take, so if you must, you can go "gringo-style." You can find recipes for Feijoada on foodnetwork.com.

So deck out the room in Brazilian décor, get your samba pumping from the stereo, shake up some caipirinhas, and get ready to down some pig snouts, because you are ready for a real Brazilian partido.

Caipirinha Recipe

Ingredients:

- 2 ice cubes
- 1 lime
- 2 tbsp sugar
- 2 oz Cachaca or Rum

Cut up the lime and place in a glass. Add sugar. Smash the lime until the juice and sugar meld into a rich froth. Add alcohol and shake. Enjoy!

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Sag Harbor is filled with unique, historic homes, as is Shelter Island and the far end of the North Fork. Sag Harbor, an old whaling town in its day, contains a historic district called Whalers Row, where Greek revival style homes built in the 1800s run along the narrow lanes one after the other. Many of these homes have been renovated and updated with the latest amenities, but most of their original detailing still remains.

One, in the heart of Sag Harbor Village, was built in 1840 and has been fully renovated, adding features such as a heated gunite pool and Jacuzzi, a poolhouse with a full bath and loft and central air. It still contains 5 fireplaces, wide planked floors, a formal dining room and powder room. This 2000 sq ft traditional has 5 bedrooms, 3 baths and sits on .26 of an acre in the Village. Its asking price is $2,125,000. Another in Sag, right in Whalers Row, is a three story 1820 Greek revival on just under half an acre. The 3004 sq ft home includes 4 bedrooms, 3.5 baths, formal dining and 2 parlors. It was updated with a pool and pool house as well, but from the street, fronted with a white picket fence, it is as if nothing has changed since the 1800s. It is listed for $2,450,000. Also in the Village is a two story traditional built in 1895 that was newly restored in 2000 and made into a legal two-family residence. The home has 4 bedrooms and 3 baths. Some of the features include wood floors, bamboo floors in the kitchen, a formal dining room, a terraced back yard and heated pool. You can walk to the beach and to the village shops. The asking price is $959,000. All three of these Sag Harbor homes are listed with The Corcoran Group's Sag Harbor office, where staff members told me they have had an extremely busy season.

On Shelter Island, where there are just 10 real estate agencies, "The inventory of listings is far less than that of the main lands on the neigh-

In the area of Shelter Island Heights you rarely see something for sale, says Ms. Marino. They just don't come up that often seeing that many are family-owned and have been passed through generations. In many cases, even with property values what they are, a home's sentimental value may have no price. This is where all the older historic homes run along the hilly, tree lined streets and Union Chapel, which was built in 1875, rests right in the middle of them in a grove. This area is one of the quaintest and most picturesque communities on the East End, where one island home is lovelier than the next.

For sale at this time from Georgiana B. Ketcham's office is a Historic Family Estate called Dering Farm. It was built by Thomas Dering in the 1770s and dates back to the Revolutionary War. The colonial main house and 3 car bay carriage house with a second story studio was built on 10 acres overlooking Gardiner's Bay. It has a gentlemen's parlor, a ladies' parlor (both with fireplaces) and a master bedroom with a fireplace and sitting room. It still contains much of the original detail, such as the pine planked floors, moldings and original windows. The kitchen has the original hearth and pantry, as well as a sunroom and powder room. The parlor windows have historic etchings and the children's rooms connect. The gated drive is a tenth of a mile. It has been updated with air conditioning, pool and pool house, base board heating and has been professionally decorated.

BREATHE DEEPLY

Dear Dan,

I am writing my first letter to Dan's Papers in response to the article written by Rebecca Dolber entitled, Chakras - To The Core, Oct. 8, 2004.

As we are becoming more aware, most of our physical illnesses are related to our experience of stress, emotional issues and energy imbalances. In addition to yoga and meditation, I would include Reiki as a "propositive" energy balancing practice (see Reiki: An Alternate Approach to Health and Healing, Dan's Papers, April 5, 2002).

Reiki utilizes the meridian system of energy pathways in the body, and the Reiki hand positions correspond to the seven Chakras. Reiki is not only a complementary treatment practice, which enhances the body's sense of well being and strengthens the immune system; it is also a spiritual discipline reconnecting us to the qualities of peace and harmony.

Come and experience Reiki at our Community Circle, Riverhead Free Library, and every 2nd, 3rd and 4th Thursday of the month from 7 p.m. to 8:45 p.m.

WATCH WHAT YOU EAT

Dear Dan,

My diet www.dietdirectives.com is beginning to get noticed. You can find out more if you go to www.dietdirectives.com and enter as your e-mail preview@dietdirectives.com and your password is lighthouse. You will see a picture of me and of my partner Meredith Luce, granddaughter of Henry Luce, and so in publishing too.

Your article is correct, but the dates are wrong. By 1980, America was getting fat. In 1985 50% of the population was overweight. The difference now is that 61million adults are obese and 25% of American children are overweight /obese.

ROLL 'EM

Dear Dan,

Your comprehensive article describing film locales in the Hamptons cited East Hampton, Montauk, Amagansett, Shelter Island, Sag Harbor, Wainscott, Water Mill, Southampton and Bridgehampton. I'm perfectly willing to accept that run-down of places, but citing Sagg Main Beach as the spot for the Viking-fashion funeral in Rocket Gibraltar cheated Hampton Bays of its rightful distinction in being included in your "popular place" list. Unless there were two "death scenes", the one I distinctly remember took place on the western shore of the Shinnecock Inlet (and was mentioned in the Southampton Press at the time).

My husband and I had parked at the Inlet in late afternoon to surf-watch and noticed a group of young men and women huddled around a derelict rowboat and wondered how, after the vacation season was over, there were so many "Yuppie" types free to be at the beach on a weekday afternoon. As time went on, we saw a cameraman carrying a tripod, someone else fashioning a dummy out of what looked like blankets, others with bows and arrows, and still others fitting the boat with a Viking-type sail. Others seemed to be installing wires or tubing. Nearing sunset, a local fire engine rolled into the parking lot, presumably as a precaution. By this time, you might say we got the picture. The boat was pulled into the water, curious pleasure craft were sent away, and as the sun began to set, archers took aim at the craft, attempting to set it afire, in accordance with the script (and Viking tradition).

Unfortunately the arrows were falling short of their target and needed a mechanical assist. On cue, at sunset, in accordance with the wishes of the Burt Lancaster character, the boat was set aflame. In the film, the scene, which took an entire afternoon to stage, was over in minutes. Yes, and it all took place in Hampton Bays.

Police Blotter

Wolfie's Hounded? Didn't know Wolfie's pulled in that kind of dough-re-mi, but according to police reports, it pulls in enough for a burglary. The Springs haunt, located on Fort Pond Boulevard, was robbed. It appears a thief broke into the bar through the back door. Once inside, he forced open the padlocked cooler, which contained the cash boxes from the register. He absconded with $3,500 in cash and another $126 from the cigarette machine.

* * *

Roomies Rumble, Fists Fly In Ongoing Argument. Though the cause of the dispute has yet to be disclosed, it's been confirmed that two men, who share a house on Red Dirt Road in Amagansett, got into a fistfight. One received medical treatment, while the other was awarded an arrest. The "puncher" was charged with third degree assault for apparently striking his housemate several times in the face. The "punchee" was attended to at Southampton Hospital and released. No word on whether the pair will continue to co-habitate.

* * *

Construction Catastrophe...House-Jacked. The discovery of a missing window, valued at $4,000 to $5,000, from a home under construction on Bay Lane in Water Mill has authorities stumped. The foreman reported the theft to Southampton Police, who are investigating.

High Speed. High Jinx. According to East Hampton Police reports, it seems speed demons lost control of their vehicles while attempting to make turns in two separate incidents. The first occurred on Three Mile Harbor Road in Springs, where a driver hit a roadside embankment and flipped his car over. Questioned by police, he allegedly explained to authorities he had been driving at a "high rate of speed." The motorist was treated for shock at Southampton Hospital and released. In the other case, the driver told police he was driving west on Town Lane when he swerved to avoid hitting a car that pulled out on Spring Close Highway. Though he avoided a collision, he collided with a street sign and then a utility pole.

* * *

Boys Will Be Boys. Two youths engaged in a fistfight outside the Sag Harbor IGA, which is located on Main Street. According to Sag Harbor Village Police reports, one teen is accused of punching another in the chest and face. The aggressor was charged with a misdemeanor, assault in the third degree, and released into the custody of his parents with an appearance ticket.

* * *

Authorities Play Hide and Go Seek, Nab Drunkard. East Hampton Village Police were advised that a man, who appeared intoxicated, was entering the vicinity. A man, apparently fitting that description, was seen "staggering into the roadway" on North Main Street. He shouted expletives at authorities and then ran down Springs-Fireplace Road. Police found the man hiding in bushes a few minutes later. He was charged with disorderly conduct and criminal possession of a controlled substance.

* * *

Boozer Bounced From Local "Juice" Joint For Passing Phony Baloney. A middle-aged woman was charged with forgery in the third degree for apparently writing 37 checks on her mother's bank account without her knowledge or permission. She was additionally charged with criminal impersonation in the second degree and petit larceny. The checks were written to the Sag Harbor Liquor store between September 5 and September 25.

* * *

Gucci, Gooci, Guchi...Gone! A California visitor to East Hampton reported to authorities that his Gucci wallet, which contained $150 in cash along with credit, A.T.M., and identification cards, was lost somewhere in the hamlet.

* * *

Hot Rod Bursts Into Flames. A Springs-Fireplace resident was driving along Route 114 in East Hampton when she saw smoke coming from the engine of her car. She pulled over to the side of the road, at which point her vehicle, a Chevrolet, burst into flames. Firefighters from East Hampton Town extinguished the blaze.
